Major Events

After two years of intensive research, a university-based study has shed new light on the socio-economic conditions of blacks and other minority groups in the United States during the Reconstruction era.

The study, entitled "The Social and Economic Foundations of the Black Community," is the culmination of a project coordinated by Milton Shapp, a professor of sociology at the University of Pennsylvania.

According to Shapp, the study "explores the economic, social, and political conditions that existed during the Reconstruction era, providing a comprehensive picture of life for African Americans during this critical period." The research, funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities, utilized a combination of primary and secondary sources to provide a detailed analysis of the period.

Shapp, who is also the editor of "The Reconstruction Era," noted that the study "is a significant contribution to our understanding of the Reconstruction era and its enduring impact on American society."

The study's findings will be published in a forthcoming volume, "The Reconstruction Era: A Comprehensive Sourcebook," which is scheduled for release later this year.

University Project Studies Comparative Mobility of Blacks, Irish, and Germans

By STEPHEN MARON

The Pennsylvania University has launched a new project studying the comparative mobility of blacks, Irish, and Germans during the Reconstruction era.

The project, led by Dr. James Brown, a professor of history at the University, seeks to analyze the socio-economic conditions and historical events that contributed to the differing levels of mobility among these groups.

"This project will provide valuable insights into the factors that shaped the lives of these groups and how they navigated the challenges of the Reconstruction era," said Dr. Brown.

The project is funded by a grant from the National Science Foundation and is expected to last for three years.

School of Continuing Education Operating Now, Studied for Future

By ADELE LINDENMEYER

The School of Continuing Education, a new program at the University of Pennsylvania, has opened its doors to a select group of students.

The school, which is designed to provide educational opportunities for adults, will offer a range of courses and programs to meet the needs of working professionals.

"This is a significant step in our efforts to expand our offerings and meet the diverse needs of our community," said Dr. John Smith, dean of the School of Continuing Education.

The school will begin with offerings in business, law, and public administration, with plans to expand its offerings in the future.

A proposal for an autonomous experimental college to provide "enriched learning environment and academic freedom" for students at the University was released Monday by the Student Council On Undergraduate Education (SCUE).

The proposal, which calls for the creation of a new college, is designed to provide a "living and learning experiment" for students and faculty.

"This is a unique opportunity for our students to engage in a dynamic and innovative educational experience," said SCUE president John Johnson.

The proposal, which has been endorsed by the University Senate, is expected to be considered by the University Board of Trustees at its next meeting.
Information about canvassing and other political activities for the NNC will be provided at that time.

The Assistant School of Communications Documentary Film Series will begin Wednesday with a presentation of our features. The films are "Night Mail" (1936) directed by John Grierson, "N.Y., N.Y." Penn Union Council will present the Jack Lemmon picture "The Apartment" on Wednesday, 8 p.m., in the Irvine Auditorium. Admission is only $1.

The movie "M" will be presented at the Auditorium. The film, sponsored by the National Movement for a New Society, will be the featured attraction.

Franklin Court will be the newest site in Independence National Historical Park, a focal point for the many visitors coming to Philadelphia for the national Bicentennial Celebration in 1976.

Franklin was interested in building and land use design, especially in the public interest. He designed his own home and designed several houses at joining his own as a financial investment.

Miss Liggett pointed out that the idea of preserving Franklin’s colonial valley is rather ironic. Franklin would be interested in the house the idea which might be smaller and has attempted to provide a “new environment and new opportunities to students at both schools.”

Students at Pennsylvania, all the victims of student disinterest when they were initially presented last spring in open forums. Yet, the proposals, which must be approved by various student, faculty, and trustee groups, could represent significant improvements in the operations of the University.

The Board of Trustees has, for too long, been a group apart from the mainstream of campus thought. Its members are generally far older, and their viewpoints far more conservative than those who attend and teach at the University. While the appointment of five younger and presumably less conservative trustees would not immediately reverse the trustee's staid stance on most issues, the introduction of young blood is a long overdue reform.

In addition to these positive recommendations, the report also includes some proposals largely irrelevant to students, such as a streamlining of the administrative hierarchy; and one particular proposal which is plainly and simply offensive to students. After several years of continued advancement in student participation in University affairs, the report now suggests that student participation on University committees be fixed at a maximum of 25 percent. Moreover, the report recommends that students not be given voting privileges on the crucial personnel and tenure committees. Thus, the most profound lithostatath to recent advances in University decision making and we hope they will be eliminated as discussion of the report continues.

With the exception of this one recommendation, we find the report praiseworthy, and we hope the various involved parties will facilitate its passage and implementation during the coming year.
