The Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) currently allocates $4.5 million a year for operation of the jointly-owned accelerator, which has the highest energy accelerator in the country. The AEC has determined that it will be able to support the project at that level of operation.

The Forestall Center is directed by a Princeton physics professor and two associate directors, one from each university. Although research at the center is primarily done by members of the physics faculty and students from both universities, Princeton, a large number of running time is given to other universities.

The spokesman pleaded with residents and businesses in the Philadelphia area to voluntarily cut their use of electricity to help avert a major blackout. He added that compliance with this request was excellent, but was expected to drop as the emergency continued.

Robert F. Gilman, president of the University, explained at a conference Thursday afternoon that the emergency was created by the company's generation of power for its own use and a large number of generating units being out of service for repair. Ordinarily, he continued, the company can handle increases in usage that accompany periods of heavy weather, but Tuesday's break- downs forced it to curtail service in selected areas on a rotating basis.

The Philadelphia area break- downs, according to United Press International, were only part of an East Coast power shortage that spread from the Canadian border to the Florida Keys. The company, which supplies electricity to New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and Washington, D.C., was operating only 40 percent of its 5500 megawatts generating plants at 10:30 a.m. and was back on about 12:30 p.m.

Elliott, professor in charge of computer science, said that federal legislation had already been introduced in Congress to prevent the University of Pennsylvania from being forced to curtail operations of the high energy accelerators in the country. He added that if the AEC's decision was appealed, the University would vote to invest a little more money in order to complete as many experiments as possible. He also said that the students were very interested in the project.

The new program is expected to replace the older one, which relied on the use of government funds. The new program will use private funds and will be designed to support the University's research efforts in the field of high energy accelerators. The new program will also provide funding for graduate students and postdoctoral fellows, as well as for equipment and facilities.

The University is currently working with the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) to develop a new program for the operation of the high energy accelerators. The new program is expected to be announced in the near future.

Economist Predicts Gm Strike Will Lower GNP; Settlement to Bring Fast Recovery

STUART STERN
Dr. Lawrence H. Klein, a prominent University economist, predicts that the strike itself will temporarily hurt the nation's economy, that an immediate recovery would result, but that an immediate recovery would result, but that an immediate recovery would result.

Economists suggest that the strike would reduce GNP; Settlement to Bring Fast Recovery

Dr. Lawrence R. Klein, a prominent University economist, indicates that the strike will reduce GNP. Settlement will bring a fast recovery, with the economy expected to recover quickly once the strike is over.

Klein explained that the equations of economic models were not designed to handle strikes. He predicted that the GNP would fall by 1% due to the strike, with a recovery expected within weeks. He believed that the "moral recovery" of the economy would occur over the next few months.

Klein also commented that if the strike lasted for another month, it would have a more severe impact on the economy. He noted that past strikes of similar duration had not caused a significant decrease in GNP. However, he acknowledged that the current economic conditions were different from those in the past.

Commenting on the strike, Klein suggested that the timing of the strike could affect its impact on the economy. He noted that the strike coincided with a period of high consumer confidence and low unemployment. Therefore, a short strike might not have as significant an impact as a longer one.

However, Klein also emphasized that the strike could have a short-term impact on the economy, particularly if it lasted for an extended period.

ECONOMIC IMPACT OF GM STRIKE

The expected impact of the GM strike on the economy is significant. GNP is projected to fall by 1% due to the strike, with a recovery expected within weeks. The settlement will bring a fast recovery, with the economy expected to recover quickly once the strike is over.

ECONOMIC RECOVERY AFTER GM STRIKE

With the strike expected to last for another month, the impact on the economy could be more severe. However, the "moral recovery" of the economy is expected to occur over the next few months.

Klein also noted that the timing of the strike could affect its impact on the economy. The strike coincided with a period of high consumer confidence and low unemployment, which could mitigate its impact.

Despite these factors, the strike could have a short-term impact on the economy, particularly if it lasted for an extended period.

ISSUE: Does the conception of an experimental college present a possible solution to the educational ills of the University and its students?

Letters to the Editor

White Privilege

Sir: The lack of perception on the part of the white student body when evaluating and/or observing the activities of the black student in our campus community is constantly bewildering to us.

We would have supposed that any group, as vitally interested in democracy and freedom as ours is, would see the paradox in the suggestion that students, for example, could not possibly be aware of the black students' activities. This, however, the reverse is seemingly the case. You appear to be completely unaware of the presence, number, or activities. Not only was there not one Black student in our group, as visually obvious as we, bewildering to us.

The structure of the experimental college may provide the framework to institutionalize freedom of choice. It could well once again make education a vibrant, relevant process, fostering interaction between people as well as ideas.

Experimentation has always been at the root of education, enabling it to adapt to changing times and needs. We hope that Provost Goddard and the University faculty will be willing to experiment.

The personable Kenney led about 250 fans and other admirers on an essentially chronological journey through the magazine's first eight months, using the table of contents as a roadmap, and the audience enjoyed the ride.

National Lampoon is a monthly humor magazine, which was first conceived by Kenney during his senior year at Harvard College, where he told the Harvard Lampoon, a satirical periodical.

The May 1970 issue, entitled "Greed" opened a series of "Eco Option ads" which received their inspiration from the spate of Madison Avenue endeavors aimed at hip, young people. "You now, "Kenney explained, "with a single move you can go from a three-story house to a beautiful new home in the suburbs that's just plain marvelous."

"The Right - Ecology" issue was slightly boring, he admitted, because "you can say anything about fish."
The bright spot in the issue for him was a feature on Siamese mushrooms which asked "Is it too late to grow mushrooms at home?"

The "E pluribus so-so," Kenney commented, "The basic idea behind the move to the suburbs would be to do what we did there, to concentrate the Berlin Wall, and the national motto would be 'Wall, and the national motto would be 'E pluribus noon.'" Kenney commented.

Kenney was enthusiastic about the show the fans had seen, saying that his favorite part of the issue was the advertisement section after the July 4th Editorial devoted to escape from that organization still comes out of this same federal funding.

are so important. More women should be able to take the training they need to join the University faculty," she said.

Departments will be asked to furnish the number of men and women graduate students, the number of graduate degree conferred, and other information concerning admissions policy and financial support for women graduate students. It is felt that the question of discrimination against female graduate students is particularly important, since it is these women who are most to the labor force for female University professors.

Dr. Cohn said that if discrimination existed, it would be difficult to say why it existed, if only because of the legal aspects. If the University discriminates it is in danger of being all grant money to the federal government.

She commented that, "Everyone has a feeling that these kinds of things go on, but the complete and accurate facts have never been available."

"We know that there is discrimination. It is the methods and modes of this discrimination that is not clear."

Dr. Cohn said that with the cooperation of the department chairmen, her committee would be able to have conclusive results in this investigation.

Though the committee is "essentially a fact-finding body," it is expected that concrete resolutions will be required by the Senate, committee, the Faculty Affairs Commission, and the University's administration to help curb the establishment of "an objective board to deal with discrimination problems - but only if the problems concern the appointment mechanism itself."

Full weekends at Penn have become as routine that the inevitable question, “How are you going to spend your free time this weekend?” has become almost as much a part of the college lifestyle as the theme song in the shower. If you haven’t studied for your exam, you probably haven’t had a near group to catch,” grinned Siddon. To go along with those famous quips, however, are the famous pregame rituals of the men’s football team. Laid-back and fun loving as they are, the Indians are known as the team pregame. As far as the Dutchmen are concerned, they’ll be tough this year.

The tournament was held in the United States in 1971, and was the first time that the Games had been held in the Western Hemisphere. The tournament was held in San Diego, California, and was the first time that the Games had been held in the United States. The tournament was won by the United States, who captured the gold medal. The silver medal was won by Canada, and the bronze medal was won by Mexico.
