Ousted West Chester Professor Supported by Nat’l Committee

By ANNE O’CONNELL

A journalism professor at West Chester State Teacher’s College has accused the university of “political” purges against faculty members. The professor, who is also a member of the faculty at West Chester College, is calling for the university to raise their salaries, fund his students’ attendance, and allow him to stand for the “political” position.

The professor, a former teacher at the Pennsylvania State University, said that he was surprised to see the university taking this action against him. He has previously held positions at other universities, including the University of Pennsylvania and the University of Delaware, where he taught courses in journalism and media studies.

In addition to raising salaries and funding for his students, the professor is also calling for a review of the university’s political climate. He said that he has witnessed an increase in political interference on campus, including the removal of faculty members who have been critical of the administration.

The university has not yet responded to the professor’s allegations.

City Commissioners Certify Student Residents as Voters

By SARAH MILLER

In direct contradiction to a Pennsylvania residency statute, three city commissioners held Friday that students may be considered legal residents of the city in which their school is located.

The ruling came during a hearing before the City Commissioners, who were considering a petition filed by 182 students whose disfranchisement had been challenged by a Republican commissioner as the grounds that they were not legal residents of the district in which they had attempted to register.

The Pennsylvania statute states: “For the purpose of registration and voting, persons shall be deemed residents of the district in which they are domiciled..." while a student of any institution in the city is deemed a resident of the city. The city is deemed a district in the city in which the student resides. The three city commissioners asserted that this interpretation was null because it would discriminate against residents of the city who are also members of the student body. A representative of the city registrar also testified that the city has no facilities for the registration of students, but that it was impossible to determine whether the student was domiciled in the city or not.

The petition was denied by the three city commissioners after a full hearing. The city registrar also denied the petition, stating that he had no authority to register students.

Teachers in Philadelphia Continue Strike

According to the Public Employee’s Activist, teachers in Philadelphia continue to strike, with more than 1,000 teachers participating in the one-day strike. The teachers are continuing their demand for a raise of 5% in base pay and a 3% increase in benefits.

The strike began at 7 a.m. on Friday and ended at 6 p.m. The teachers were demanding an increase in base pay and benefits, including health insurance and retirement pensions.

Although the majority of Philadelphia teachers did not participate in the strike, a few thousand teachers did support the strike and were involved in various activities, including picketing and distributing leaflets.

The strike continues despite the fact that the school board had previously offered a 3% increase in base pay.

The teachers have been without a contract since September 2018, and the strike has been ongoing since then.

‘Community’ Schools to Open

The School District of Philadelphia, in cooperation with the city’s ‘Community’ Schools, announced on Monday that it will be opening a new school in the city of Philadelphia. The school, which will be located in the Center City area, will be dedicated to providing a quality education for all students in the city.

The school, which will be called the Philadelphia Community School, will be a K-8 school with an enrollment of 800 students. The school will offer a rigorous curriculum with a focus on arts, music, and technology.

The school will be staffed by experienced educators, including principals, aides, and teachers. The faculty will be supported by a strong PTO and a dedicated administration team.

The school will offer a variety of extracurricular activities, including sports, music, and art. The school will also have a strong emphasis on community service and will encourage students to participate in community-based projects.

The school will be funded by a combination of public and private sources, including federal and state grants, as well as donations from local businesses and individuals.

The school will serve students from all backgrounds, including those who are economically disadvantaged, and will provide a supportive and inclusive environment for all students.

The school is expected to open in the fall of 2020, and applications are now being accepted.

...a discussion of educational philosophy with Jerome Segal...

The University as a Means of Finding Ourselves

The time you get to revolution you don't have different people making that revolution, you might have what will be repression. We might therefore "develop personalities" that are not going for any vision, or in the sense, to arrive of idea of education that teaches the body and emotions and senses as well as the mind.

And yet an element of dignity is directly related to the incidence of violence. The American people cannot rely on officials to end the war.

The left is being over taken by violent
