Discharged Campus Guard’s Request For Review Ignored

By JACOUB SUCEK

A former University guard, who claims he was "arbitrarily" discharged, has been attempting to get his job back for several years with no success.

Louis Brunelli, the guard, said Wednesday that Capt. George Burch of the University’s security force had told him that if he were to return to the campus, he would have to undergo a security check and the process would take at least a week.

"He said they would have to go through the union," said Brunelli, who was fired in 1971. "That’s why I’m still here."

On March 1, 1992, when the firing was first announced, Brunelli had an interview with the union, which he said he felt was "rigged." He has been trying to get his job back ever since.

Burch, who was interviewed on campus Wednesday, said he was not aware of any union activities regarding Brunelli’s discharge.

"I haven’t heard anything from them," Burch said. "I don’t know what it was."
The University Law School will be interviewing applicants for the position of Dean at the new Houston Hall. Any interested juniors are invited to attend a brief meeting at 7:00 P.M. on Friday, Oct. 30, from 9:00 P.M. to 1:00 A.M. in the lounge of Christian Assoc, 36th & Locust Sts."

Editor's Note: The author, an emerging leader in the Critical Theory, insightful analysis and inspiration.

There are two main sets of problems associated with the notion of the liberal education. The first, which is difficult to define but impossible to ignore, is an issue related directly to the status of the university. Using the metaphor of the university to provide the basis for the concept of the liberal education. The second set of problems is related to the concept of the liberal education. The second kind of consideration, the nature of the relationships, the appropriate teaching and training, and the discipline of the liberal education.

As regards the current university, the dilemma is not whether to make it relevant, but that, in fact, it is already relevant, all relevant. Clark Kerr, whose influence, profoundly affecting the American university, is not primarily concerned with preserving the market dominance of the universities, but with the maintenance of prestige and reputation of these institutions.

The question, then, is not whether the University can be bad - the lady has bought her virtue - rather than what and at what price. Since in society power goes up, and advantages invariably accumulate, these same groups and interests that dominate social, political and especially economic power in the United States - the government, the military, the corporations, and the large banks - are in a position to exert a not so subtle influence over the society at large. Are the United States - the government, the military, the corporations, and the large banks - oriented to external pressures, values and interests. This is the model of the University as supermarket, selling its wares to the affluent customers, and transforming its product, like any shrewd manufacturer, in the present.

The question, then, is whether the University can be bad - the lady has bought her virtue - rather than what and at what price. Since in society power goes up, and advantages invariably accumulate, these same groups and interests that dominate social, political and especially economic power in the United States - the government, the military, the corporations, and the large banks - are in a position to exert a not so subtle influence over the society at large.

Thus, the University supports a social and intellectual order dominated by the bourgeoisie, the black and white, the rich and the poor, and the existing social and economic systems. In the realm of the cultural and educational systems, the University, reversing the devious structure of modern society, dematerializes the effects of a humanistic education, and thus the University, appearing on the surface to offer a meaningful reorientation, is not. The University offers meaningful reorientation, but to the Academy, to permit the privileged position of the University in the struggle for power and prestige.

A Philadelphia regional coalition of the National Coalition Against War, the Community Involvement Council of Philadelphia, and the United States Department of State have circulated a petition to the United Nations to protest alleged genocide in the United States.

The petition claims that the federal, state, and city governments have violated the U.N. Genocide Convention through the "massacre-like" attacks on Black youth in Chicago, Los Angeles, and Jackson, Mississipi," Police attack on campus displaced the Black Panthers Party are cited by the petition as "concrete examples" of such persecution.

As explained in the petition, the U.N. General Assembly, on Dec. 3, formally defined genocide as the killing of a people, racial or other, "without racial, ethnic or national basis" to members of any linguistic, ethnic or racial group. The petition charges the United States government with violating this Genocide Convention as well as the basic constitutional rights of the "Red, Brown, Yellow and Black Americans." As a result, the petition calls for the enactment of "economic and political sanctions against the United States Government" by the U.N.

A campus spokesman Harold Davis, a college junior, explained that this coalition of local groups is trying to "create a common forum" for a discussion of "classical examples" of such persecution.

Davis went on to explain that the petitions will be presented to the United Nations on Nov. 21, in conjunction with a rally at the U.N. Columbus Circle, adjacent to the U.N. and the Genocide Petition. Applications required that law students without undergraduate business degree seek the business background valuable to lawyers working in corporate and business law. A law student interested in these areas, Samson said, can get a well-rounded business background in less than two years at the joint program.

Samson said that the Law School was very enthusiastic about such a program. "We look for a heightened interest in both law and business administration from the students in the joint program," he said. "I think the training offered at our entire faculty.

One of what is needed at the University is more interdisciplinary work. "We have one joint degree program with the city planning department, in which the student earns a law degree along with a master's degree in city planning."

Wolfman remarked that the Law School already has one joint degree program with the city planning department, in which the student earns a law degree along with a master's degree in city planning. Wolfman said that the Law School is now planning a new program which will combine the law degree with a degree in Economics, Public Policy Analysis. The joint program will be the first program available in the Wharton School.

Now you can DIAL Person-to-Person, Collect and Credit Card Calls from any phone in Philadelphia.

Just follow these easy dialing directions

For Person-to-Person Calls

Dial "0" (Operator), followed immediately by the Area Code (if other than 215) and the number you want. When the operator answers, tell her the name of the person you're calling. Meanwhile, your call is speeding on its way.

For Collect and Credit Card Calls

Dial "0" (Operator), followed immediately by the Area Code (if other than 215) and the number you want. When the operator answers "Collect," give your name — or your Credit Card number.

For Station-to-Station Calls

Continue to dial in the usual way. Within the Philadelphia Metropolitan Calling Area, dial the number only. Beyond the Metropolitan Area, dial "1", then the Area Code (if other than 215), and the number.

Keep handy the dialing instruction folder you received in the mail. You'll also find complete dialing directions in the Pink Pages of your Telephone Directory.

One Year at the Helm Tames ‘Madman’ Nash

The usual observer has great difficulty in understanding what manner of madman is necessary to hold thousands of miles of rowing, count the wind, and the climate of the Frankford Field, and numerous warnings to overcome all the obstacles that face him. But he explains it in his own day-to-day manner; the responsibility of building a sports team and then the control of a sport that has scant public interest and recognition in this country.

And now that he has involved, he is able to explain the power of the media's attention to people who believe in the importance of the sport to any other kind. He is no longer the ‘Madman’ Nash.

Nash has been involved with crew for his entire life. He is an Olympic oarsman (gold medal in the Rome Olympics) and now as a coach.

As the oarsman, Nash was tutored by the coaching style, the conditions that exist today, and the climate of the sport. Evaluating his coaching style, it was once said that Nash has many firm beliefs about the efficacy of crew and is an articulate spokesman for the sport. “I believe there are two priorities of reasons for competing:” he said, “I guess Penn has grown up to some extent, to be a major football program, but I didn’t count on that.”
