Last Friday afternoon another University coed was assaulted and raped in a University parking garage located at 39th and Wood Streets.

In the 1:30 A.M. shooting Tuesday, a 23-year-old woman, a junior in the College for women, was stabbed at WASHINGTON — Organized labor agreed today to go along with the administration's House Ï11 economic controls after getting a statement introduced by President Lyndon B. Johnson that the government would set wage and price guides.

Two labor groups that would have been asked to serve on the board that will set the guidelines gave their approval to the plan after hearing the President's statement at the end of the midday wage freeze news conference November 11.

SARGONT — President Nguyen Van Thieu Tuesday hailed charges of rigging in the recent one-man presidential election and said he hoped the one-for-one swap of a U.S. labor representative would serve on the board that will set the guidelines.

Tass said. He expressed confidence the Soviet Union will help but that Russia would not stint its military aid to the Arabs.

Are you upset because no one will talk to you?

When the DP Troubleshooter makes a call, administrators and faculty and even Superblock managers sit up and take notice!

But now he needs help solving your problem, or there won't be any more Troubleshooter.

Come down to the DP office in Sergeant Hall any afternoon, or call 4-0581 and ask for you-know-who.

Help him. You'll even find out who he is that way.

OOPS, WE GOOFED

In a feature story about someone appearing in yesterday's DP, several members of Kappa Delta and Chi Omega were incorrectly identified throughout the story as being from Kappa Delta and Chi Omega. Brenda is the president of Kappa Delta, and Chi Omega. Lisa Rendine is the president of Kappa Delta and Chi Omega. The Daily Pennsylvanian regrets these errors.

The new university museum wing, completed at a cost of $4.8 million, will officially open October 29 and also contain expanded quarters for the art, archeology, and religious center of ancient Mesopotamia. These tablets from the first, second, and third millennium B.C. were brought to Philadelphia between 1888 and 1953 when they were purchased from the University Museum's excavation at Nippur. It is now clear that these tablets have been kept on shelves in the museum.

The task of transferring these tablets to their new high-regulation temperature-controlled rooms, the fragile tablets can be better-preserved after they are binned in a new lab, which was just installed in the museum.

Many of the Sumerian tablets are written in ancient cuneiform, ranging from economics to divination. Some of the writings parallel biblical stories, such as an account of a Noah-like figure who built an ark to survive a flood. Most interesting, though, are economic texts describing simple daily day-to-day market transactions. The texts at the museum are a major source of information for our understanding of the ancient Mesopotamian civilization. At the present 15 percent of these remains is being catalogued. Dr. Rudolph, Lechler, and Eichler plan to complete publishing the Sumerian texts in about five years.

Univ. Museum Will House New Library

By MINDY BRONSON

The oldest library on earth will be housed in the just-constructed educational wing of the University Museum.

The new museum wing, shown above, will house the oldest library on earth. The new educational area project, run in conjunction with area schools, enables elementary and high school students to visit the museum.

Imaginative, but the money that the Co-op has spent in the last few years has probably gone toward support of living wages for the workers and the purchase of some new equipment. It is not sure how much of the Co-op's spending has gone to those ends, but it is clear that the Co-op has made some significant investments in its human resource and physical capital.

During this summer the Co-op increased the amount of money it paid to its employees. The Co-op also decided to purchase some new equipment, which will allow it to increase its productivity and reduce its costs. It is not clear how much of the Co-op's spending has gone to these purposes, but it is clear that the Co-op has made some significant investments in its human resource and physical capital.

The Co-op's decision to increase the amount of money it paid to its employees and to purchase new equipment is an indication of the Co-op's commitment to providing a fair living wage to its workers and to improving its productivity and reducing its costs. Tuesday morning's rape victim told police that her apartment door was unlocked at the time of the attack. Robinson explained that "the girl had gone to the trash chute earlier in the day to get her last pizza."

She said that at that time the door was unlocked, and that she had entered the building through the trash chute.

Robinson was quoted as saying, "In the trash chute, the girl was in full view of the public who were coming and going."

She added, "I don't think it was a safe place to go." The girl was taken to the hospital and treated for injuries.

The incident came after a series of other incidents on campus, including several reports of break-ins and thefts.

The university administration has been urged to increase security measures, particularly at night, and to provide more lighting in areas where students are likely to be walking alone.

The university has also been asked to consider implementing a mandatory curfew for students, as well as increasing patrols in the area.

The university has responded by increasing security measures, including the deployment of additional police officers and the installation of additional lights in the area.

The university also has plans to expand the campus police force, and to consider implementing a mandatory curfew for students.

The Curriculum Committee recently met to discuss the restructuring of the undergraduate program and, as a result, began the process of revising the current program. The report stated: "The recommendations made by the committee for the undergraduate program will be presented to the Curriculum Committee in the fall of 1972 for review and revision until the end of the academic year.

The report foresaw no problems with the current program, but it added: "The Committee is confident that it has "apprised of the factors behind the decision to revamp the undergraduate program."

The report noted that it was "unanimous" and that it "has been outstanding in its dual role as a center for research and as a center for the undergraduate program.

The Curriculum Committee also stressed that it was "unanimous" that the undergraduate program was "unanimous."

Fullbacks Mean Blocking to Aschman

By TED METZGER

Steve Aschman is the kind of fullback that a player would like to block for. The Richmond, Va., native continuously frustrates defensive linemen by opening gaping holes for his backfield mates. When he is not neutralizing the ball carriers, he is blocking for the quarterback.

Aschman is a hard worker and dedicated student. He is a 160-pound, 6'0" senior with a 3.8 grade point average. He is a Red and Blue All-American football fullback and a first-team All-Pennsylvania selection in track and field.

Aschman's junior year with the Quakers was a disappointment. "I played 14 games last year, but I still made a lot of mistakes," said Steve. "I'm still working hard to make sure that I play better this year."

Aschman's sophomore year was a success. He played in all 11 games and started at fullback for the last five games. He led the team with 11 touchdowns and was second on the team in rushing with 958 yards. He also had a record-breaking 12 rushing touchdowns.

Aschman is a key ingredient in the Penn offense. "I'm not afraid to run the ball and I'm good at blocking," he said. "But the other guys have to do their jobs and I'll take care of the rest."

Aschman has a special bond with his teammates. "I've been with these guys for three years and we've developed strong friendships on and off the field," he said. "We're like a family and we always try to motivate each other to do our best."
