Vickers Will Leave
As Finance Head
For Australian Post

BY MICHAEL SILVER
The Chairman of the Finance Department, Dr. Douglas Vickers, has submitted his resignation in order to accept a professorship in his native Australia. Vickers has been offered a position as professor and head of the finance department at the University of Western Australia, where he taught during the summers of 1968. He will remain at Pennsylvania until the end of the academic year.

"It is really a great loss for our department and for the Wharton School," Professor of Finance Dr. Jean Crockett said Monday. "Dr. Vickers is well known for his contributions to the theory and curriculum of finance. His ideas on modern portfolio theory have been very influential in the field."

Vickers left Australia 23 years ago and received his doctorate at the University of London. He came to Pennsylvania in 1967 when Dr. Jack McPherson was chosen to fill the University's then-acting finance chairman.

"My years here have been very happy and very productive," Vickers said. "We are a very happy and happy faculty. This is a fine place to work."

Vickers, who is an expert on multinational finance and has been chairman of the search committee, has been dean of the graduate courses offered by the finance department.

"Young friends," he continued, "I don't believe in saying anything that I want to say."

"I think we should become more involved," Seely said. "I think we should be more involved."

The debate clearly centered around Frank L. Roney, the city police commissioner. Seely has been a strong supporter of the commissioner, while Roney has been a staunch opponent.

The debate centered on the issue of police reform. Seely argued for a more comprehensive reform plan, while Roney advocated for a more gradual approach. Seely argued that the police department needed to be restructured, while Roney argued that the current system was adequate.

Seely called it "one of the finest speeches" anywhere in the field of American, Soviet, and Israeli Jewry. Seely praised the Speaker's "brilliant" words and "brilliant" arguments.

Edwin Hartman, an assistant dean at Hillel, said: "The Hillel Foundation's number of students in the College who have dropped out of college, or at least spend some time away from college, is much at will. The leave category includes leaves for medical reasons, family obligations, and travel. In the past, there are no pat formulas or rules. The selection process is "more subjective," Seely said. "We have to get away from the computerized, impersonal evaluation of admissions."

The father of the young student who had taken a leave of absence for the Wharton School all reported that a high percentage of drop-outs return. "I learned a lot, I learned a lot," he explained. "The experience actually proves harmful. As an in-school absence," he continued that in solitude probably reflects a more realistic view of the University. He noted that before and after they return, however, Hartman indicated "they don't have any illusions" about what the University is all about, and that even by choosing to leave, the student claims to have overcome a fear of failure. The process is much the same in other schools at the University. Viewed from the Wharton School's perspective, he and a student observed that there are a lot of leaves that are taken for good reasons. GROOVY

In two previous issues, we have discussed the phenomenon of students taking a leave of absence from school. The phenomenon is not new, and in fact, is quite common in our society. In fact, it is so common that it has been referred to as "the leave-taking syndrome."

...the individual, who has recovered before being allowed to return to school. Students who took leaves from college for medical reasons is also required to be re-examined by the college's medical council to ensure that they have recovered before allowing them to return to school. Students who have had a leave of absence for medical reasons must have their medical records reviewed by the college's medical council before being allowed to return. The student's medical records must show that they have been cleared by the college's medical council before being allowed to return.

"I could be doing anything in the world I wanted, and being at Penn was not the best."

On the other hand, a person who chooses to leave school for a variety of reasons is often quite happy to be away from school. Indeed, as highly as they regard the school's officials when he plans to take a leave of absence, the parents are the most important part of the process.

"The process is much the same in other schools at the University. Viewed from the Wharton School's perspective, it is clear that there are a lot of leaves that are taken for good reasons. The Co-op Isn't Dead

By ARBY BUCKLE

Recently the RPI has been slow to show a sliver of interest on our part. Our group, early this week, met at the Free Left Press, a defunct, outmoded, non-existent entity, to discuss seminars on their own, and nothing has come of it. We should be grateful to the RPI for letting us hold our meetings

I thought that the Co-op was the closest we get to a university, where we could work together in order to give the RPI a better food-at-low-cost. A place where people can come together and think that we can be a superman.

I honestly think myself and the students who have appointed us, that we should be grateful to the RPI for letting us hold our meetings.

The Right Answer to a Wrong Question

Golty Ge Whiz, Coach

By JOHN RILEY

The laconicity of Penn is on an order of magnitude that is incomprehensible. As we stride down the path of mediocrity, our efforts to achieve excellence are undermined by the weight of mediocrity. The only way to overcome this is to raise our standards and demand excellence from ourselves.

The Back to the Future

I visualize the year 2000 as a time when we will have achieved the goal of excellence and mediocrity will be a distant memory. The fear that mediocrity will return will be the greatest achievement of our society.

Our students will look back on this period with pride and will say, "We did it! We achieved excellence!"

Last Friday Harry Gamble was forced to make a decision that he did not want to make. His team was in a must-win situation.

The lockerroom at Penn must be an awful prissy place. None of that legendary lockerroom-type talk that is indigenous to practically every university. The lockerroom at Penn is more like a library, with a few football players sitting around reading the latest issue of Sports Illustrated.

The lockerroom at Penn is a place of quiet contemplation, where the players reflect on their lives and the challenges that lie ahead. It is here that they make the decisions that will shape their futures.

I believe that Harry Gamble will make the right decision, and we will see the rewards of his wisdom in the future.

When the report of the Subcommitte on AROTC-NEOTC was placed before Council for consideration, it became clear that the body had become a mouthpiece for those who were against the policies of the administration. The council, however, was not able to take any action, due to the lack of quorum.

The debate on the Octo 14 was a step forward in providing the much-needed airing of views on a subject that has been hidden for too long. A defensive stance by Council on this and other issues - rather than thoroughly-researched decisions on minor proposals - can provide the direction that the administration needs, in order to achieve cooperation of all Council members can debate the issues in detail. The council, however, does not materialize. Council's business will be the continued proliferation of a philosophy that has too often lacked definition and deprived the administration of a platform for its decisions, expressed through a representative body.

Seely continued that while generally following the quotas and responsibilities and our staff is tuned short here or a little over there," the former senate administration director at Yale concluded.

Seely also threw a need for an updated policy statement, which would include a re-evaluation of the University's purposes. "The University basically does what it wants," Seely commented.

We said that once those ends were clearly defined, a new admissions policy could be formulated to reflect the University's goals.

Seely also defended that there has been discussion of reducing the freshman class to approximately 200 and admitting more transfer students. He noted, however, that no concrete proposals had yet been formulated and that the idea was still under discussion.

Responsibility for the change would rest with President Moyers and Provost Rait.

Leopards, 76 Trombones Invade Astro Turf

While the 36th marching band that will invade the Astrodome on Saturday night will not be as well-known as the band that played at halftime last week, it will be a welcome addition to the traditional two-show contest that will go on for three days. Seely Lauds McGill Report; Seeks 'Selective Admissions'

By CHAT BLAKEMAN

The University's provost, Peter Seely, Wednesday praised the basic tenets of the McGill study on admissions, but said this year he would seek to make Pennsylvania State's selection process "more subjective," the report, which has been released, is "an input in selecting University applicants in order to produce a broader, more personal evaluation of admissions data". Seely said he would be willing to serve in a three-person program to make admissions decisions.

I think we should become more subjective," Seely said. "We have to get away from the computerized, machine operations that have characterized admissions policies in the past. There are no criteria, I mean direct confrontation between Philadelphians."

According to the McGill report, the University should be more selective in admissions policy. Seely said he was surprised that the plan would work only if the family members were "willing to speak for the student". In his view, not only in admitting students with an expression of their interest and understanding, but also in recommending students for the University.

More Students Taking Leaves; Most Return

By CHAT BLAKEMAN

It is said that you retired college and studied two years later unless the college chose to withdraw, but to do it after you were about to sit in college, or at least spend time in new courses in the fall. This is the view of the students at Haverford who are searching for a way to be "set back" in college.

The debate clearly centered around Frank L. Rizzo. The former police commissioner has not been seen around the area nearly as much as his Republican opponent. Because he has not made himself available, Rizzo has had little opportunity to explain his beliefs. Rizzo insisted that he had nothing to say and did not want to respond to issues, but that only gets him into trouble. Rizzo said that if he had nothing to say, then he was sure to say nothing.

"Young friends," he continued, "I am not in this to attack anything, but to point out that there is a great deal of truth to what is being said.

He had a plan, and at least he has something to say. The debate yesterday was the one and only time the voters of the United States were asked to vote on their candidate's position on the one generation after' the Holocaust. He reminded the Jews of the difficulties of the candidates to action in being the Jews of Action.

SENATE CREATES CONSUMER ADVOCATE

Washington—The Senate voted Tuesday to create an independent consumer protection agency, but refused to give it all the authority and funds Sader and the commerce committee had proposed. Members called the bill after rejecting an amendment that would have given the proposed agency authority to issue binding orders against unfair practices. The Senate would retain the right to obtain testimony from industry. Sader promised to keep the fight for an independent agency, and said, "The Senate was right this time."

One student, who worked on a kibbutz in Israel, said he left because "he felt it would be better for him to feel the true essence of life here."

And Knapp added: "The reason why people drop out and later returned to the University differs in the time spent away from campus was worthwhile, especially in terms of getting a better understanding of themselves."

Furter commented that many students who took leaves from Jefferson had returned feeling more confident. He suggested that exchanging his version: "I'm very sorry I left. Me t are happy that I learned that I'm more social than I thought."

Others, though, claim they learned how to be more independent. One student claimed they learned to be more academic interests more freely: "I learned a hell of a lot more individual." He explained that this changed outlook on their undergraduate experience.

Many students who take leaves travel while many others take jobs, often working in factories or restaurants. Some have been able to find jobs teaching or counseling at schools for the handicapped. About half of the students who have been away from school, most of the leave was due to medical reasons is also required to reapply.

As Hartman pointed out, there are other reasons which make students hesitant about taking leaves: "More people say they'd like to take a leave of absence."

Yet despite these pressures, students are continuing to take time away from school. University officials, as well as the students themselves, seem to agree that the decision to take a leave of absence is not taken lightly. In the past few years, University Council has sunk deeper and deeper into a quagmire of parliamentary maneuvers which have undermined the basic foundations of the student's movement. This is almost the only reason for its existence today.

The Second Hour

When the report of the subcommittee on TEP was placed before Council for consideration, it became clear that the body had heeded the warnings of those who had been levying against it, as well as President Bern's remarks - the meeting which urged broad reaction, rather than detailed analysis, at committee meetings as it was.

On the issue of tobacco, the TEP was a step toward providing the mechanism for addressing the need for the student's movement to be treated as a whole. An established plan of action for the future of the movement was presented to the University in the form of a report, which was a matter to Gamble.

DP Troublesheeter

I heard the sounds of a large crowd of people coming toward us. I knew that Rizzo was just going to say something that would change the situation. We all turned around to see what was happening. It was a moment of silence as everyone waited for Rizzo to speak. He took a deep breath and began to talk.

Rizzo: "I've had enough of this. I've heard enough of the same old lies. I've heard you say that I'm a failure. I've heard you say that I can't handle the city's finances. I've heard you say that I'm not a good leader. But I'm here to tell you that I'm not going to let these attacks get me down. I'm going to fight back and I'm going to win."

I couldn't believe what I was hearing. I had never seen Rizzo so angry. But I knew that he was right. He had the courage to stand up and fight back. And I was proud to be a part of this movement.

In the end, it was a clear victory for Rizzo. He had shown the people of the city that he was capable of handling the situation. And he had proved that he was willing to stand up and fight for what was right. I was proud to be a part of this movement and I was looking forward to the future.
