Finances Play Critical Role
In Future Quality of Faculty

By THOMAS PAPSON
(Today's news analysis is the second in a two-part series.)

"I went on an aggressive for this University to do something rather drastic to maintain its good departments..." -Dr. Louise Shoemaker, former president of the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), on faculty finances.

Financial determinants are commonly cited as one of many factors which may influence a professor's decision not to resign. As the J. citator noted last week that "while all incentives are being offered, it is in unusual high level of concern about faculty finances at the University."

Dr. Shoemaker instructed last week that while "all incentives are being offered, it is not in unusual high level of concern about faculty finances at the University."

And budget administrator Jane Rubinstein, although a strong believer in the primary of paying competitive salaries, noted that "it's not in unusual high level of concern about faculty finances at the University."

The New Mayor: Gunpowder or Blue-Blood Liberal

By M. STUART MADDEN

(Retired by permission of The Village Voice)

Charles Evans shortly after becoming mayor of Philadelphia, received a phone call from Philadelphia's chief of police, who was reported to have offered the very surprised mayor this advice: "If you become mayor, you'd better get out of town."

Of course, Evans, like the Reverend Waldo the Common Man, was not particularly impressed with the police commissioner's offer to serve him as a guide to the out-of-town places Evans might consider visiting for a few years' recuperation. Nor was he, of course, particularly impressed with the advice itself. But he did have one or two other matters of concern to attend to, so he arranged to receive more helpful advice from his Chief of Police.

The police commissioner's advice was given in the form of written verse, and read as follows:

Mechano-Knight

Mechano-Knight is a man of might
Who cannot be overcome by right

By his fearsome force he conquers all
And the city of Philadelphia falls

But to path the road to victory
He must have money to deploy

To buy a ring of bullets and guns
And spend it all on police and munitions

For the city of Philadelphia
Is not a place for a weak-kneed man

But a place for a strong-willed, well-armed man
Who can make the city safe from harm

Philadelphia has been questioned by the FBI's own Uniform Crime Reporting System, a CBS News Poll has shown that 50% of the voters don't know the qualifications of any of the candidates, and the Philadelphia Inquirer poll has shown that 46% of the voters are not familiar with the candidates. Junior quarterback GARY SHUE and soph split end DON CLUNE were revelations of the offensive player of the week award for their performances against Harvard's sophomores. Shue connected on 12 of 25 passes for 258 yards. Of that amount, 288 yards were rushed by him, making Shue the second leading rusher for the team. As for Clune, he also rushed for 288 yards, including a 76-yard pass play, giving the big man of the week a total of 288 yards and 10 touchdowns. The combination of Shue and Clune's performances brought to the attention of the Ivy League their potential as one of the top offensive teams in the league.

ARE YOU PLAYING

"FATHERHOOD ROULETTE?"

By JOHN WESTBERG

Douglas, a sociological Sports Editor.

By J. B. R. D. D. D.

It has been many a month since the last football game, but the memories of that day will keep lingering in the minds of those who were there, and the anticipation for the next one will keep growing. The Harvard-Harvard game on November 23rd is set to be a massive event, with thousands of fans expected to attend. The stakes are high, with the winner taking home the coveted Harvard-Harvard trophy and the loser面临着 the wrath of the student body. For many, this game is more than just a football game; it's a battle between two great institutions, two great cities, and two great nations. As the date approaches, the excitement builds, and the tension mounts. It's a game that you don't want to miss.
