In Revised Draft Regulations

By United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department announced Tuesday that it would immediately begin a sweeping reclassification of veterans, including historically the 1-A classification, which covered those medically, morally or morally disqualified except in a national emergency. All changes were among a series of new and reorganized regulations, announced to conform with the new law signed by President Nixon Sept. 28 which extends his draft authority for 30 more months and which abolishes the 1-Y classification, which covered the unqualified except in a national emergency. As a result of the new law, the government will no longer have to seek the consent of Congress to extend the draft.

University Voting District

Longworth paid a surprise visit to the voting district Monday afternoon and was greeted by a spontaneous applasus from most people in the room. Longworth stayed only a few minutes to wave at the crowd and check how many students had voted.

The atmosphere around the polling stations was generally lively. Although the weather was cool and a drizzle may have lowered some voters' turnout, there was no long wait for either Republicans or Democrats. Several students who were working as poll watchers said that the atmosphere at polling stations was generally apathetic. There was only the occasional bit of activity, such as taken place by a group of eight voters who lined up outside the polling station at the City Hall to protest the lack of available voting booths.

The Republican party in this district had a slight edge with 510 votes out of 1,000 registered voters, compared to 490 for the Democrats. However, the margin was much smaller than in other districts where Republicans had a large lead.

The night was marked by a number of incidents that threatened to disrupt the voting process. At one point, a group of students tried to block the entrance to the polling station, but they were quickly dispersed by police officers.

The turnout was generally low, with only a few hundred people voting in each of the five polling places. However, there were reports of some difficulties with the voting machines, with some voters unable to cast their ballots. Some students who were working as poll watchers reported that the machines were not functioning properly.

Despite these problems, the voting process generally ran smoothly. The atmosphere was calm and quiet, with only the occasional bit of activity from the students who were working as poll watchers. Overall, the voting district appeared to be a model of smooth operation.

Voting Privilege Petitions

Lawyers from the Longworth and Southwark district were present in the room. After filling out the form for the voter, the voter will be notified when his petition is heard. In general, it is not necessary to be present at the hearing.

Frank Rizzo: Tough Cop Now Top Man

By United Press International

Frank L. Rizzo, the first police chief to become mayor of a major American city, finally is poised to make a move toward that goal.

The 51-year-old Rizzo, the Philadelphia lawman who has been regarded as a tough cop, has emerged as a leading contender for the top job in the city's government. He is expected to announce his bid for the mayor's job in the coming weeks.

Rizzo, who has been in law enforcement for more than 30 years, has a reputation for being tough on crime. He has been credited with helping to reduce crime rates in Philadelphia, and he has been praised for his leadership in times of crisis.

Rizzo was born in South Philadelphia, the son of an Italian immigrant who spent 43 years in the U.S. Navy. He is a graduate of the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, where he studied business administration. Rizzo was active in student affairs while at the university, and he later served as a professor at the university.

Rizzo was appointed police commissioner in 1969, and he served in that position until 1971, when he was appointed mayor.

Rizzo has been criticized for his handling of police matters, and he has been accused of being too lenient on certain crimes. However, many people believe that he has done a good job of keeping the city safe.

Rizzo's campaign for mayor has focused on crime prevention and community safety. He has pledged to increase police patrols and to hire more police officers.

Rizzo's campaign has also focused on economic development. He has promised to attract new businesses to the city and to create new jobs.

If Rizzo is elected mayor, he will be the first African-American to hold that position in Philadelphia. He will also be the first Democrat to hold that position in Philadelphia since 1952.

Rizzo's campaign has also focused on education. He has promised to invest more money in the city's schools and to improve the quality of education.

Rizzo's campaign has also focused on the environment. He has promised to reduce the city's carbon footprint and to create more green spaces.

Rizzo's campaign has also focused on health care. He has promised to expand access to health care and to improve the quality of health care in the city.

The Election

When Thacher Langstreth conceded the election last night to Frank Banks and urged his supporters to rally around the new mayor, the supporters at Langstreth headquarters cheered their leader. It was difficult for them — and for us — to accept as a leader a man whose name was seconded diametrically opposed to the values they held and worked for.

But the key to this election was demonstrated not to be the values of students, or blacks, or advocates for sweeping governmental reform. Instead, progressive ideology fell before the program of police protection and reduced taxes that Banks had promised to the residential sectors of Northeast and South Philadelphia.

The University of the Community

The renovated Connaissance has long been responsible for bringing the University to the public, and the organization at the University, has proved to be the values of students, or blacks, or advocates for them — and for us — to accept as a leader a man whose name was seconded diametrically opposed to the values they held and worked for.

Thinking-Man Gribbin Plays Soccer Just for the Fun of It

By RORY WILSON

"Oh, you'd wonder where the yellow went when you brush your teeth with Pepsodent!"

So goes the advice Level Football chubby huffy. One well-meaning coach, Mr. Hackett, using the same scenario, although phrasing the query differently; found a similarly skilled pastime: "Cross-country Haven to play Yale this weekend."

Haven to play Yale this weekend."

"You'd be surprised how much the players can drink."

Mr. Hackett, using the same scenario, although phrasing the query differently; found a similarly skilled pastime: "Cross-country running."

Not one to miss a opportunity, Mr. Hackett built up a plan that would involve running with the runners. He had previously worked with the runners and knew that they were capable of great things. The plan was to have the runners run a 5-mile course around the town, and then return to the starting point for a celebratory pizza party. The runners eagerly agreed to the plan, and the day of the race arrived.

At the starting line, Mr. Hackett gave a short speech about the importance of hard work and dedication, and then the runners set off. The weather was perfect for running, with a mild breeze and clear skies. The runners ran the 5-mile course with ease, and Mr. Hackett followed closely behind, cheering them on.

As they approached the finish line, the runners began to tire. But Mr. Hackett's words of encouragement helped them to push through the pain and cross the finish line. The runners were exhausted, but happy to have completed the race.

Mr. Hackett's plan was a success. The runners gained a sense of accomplishment and a newfound respect for the sport of cross-country running. And best of all, they had a great time doing it!
