Penn Players Hit Winning Combination

By SUSAN BIRCH

At last a really entertaining evening of theater is available on the University campus. The Penn Players' first series of one-act plays this year—Leonard Mirsky's "Birds," John Grace's "Homework," and "Do Story" by Edward Allen chewed that the Players have hit a long-overdue combination of the right plays and the right people to do them. The series gets off to a fairly slow start with "Birds," but by the end of the series the players are more in tune with the characters and are able to make better use of their talents.

The "Do Story" is a particularly funny piece about the American family, with a good deal of the dead-end-ness that pervades the contemporary American family. And the "Homework" is an excellent study of the relationship between the student and the teacher and the practitioner and the patient. The "Homework" is a delight to watch and to listen to, but the production is not all that will be remembered after the show is over.

The Penn Players' "Nowhere Man," directed by Donald Sheehan, is a fine production of a work that is both funny and touching. The play deals with the problem of how to survive in a world that is in constant flux. The characters are well drawn and the acting is excellent.

The University's legal counsel has explained that the student's demand letter is not without effect. The University was exploring every possible means to find legal basis for the payment of the increase. The letter was sent by the students and it was hoped that the University would accept the letter as "the opt-out" for the grade and a full payment of the wage increase. The University teaching fellows were preparing for the next academic year's contract before Aug. 15, the effective date of the freeze. Dopple's recent graduate of the University Law School, explained that since freeze guidelines are "unclear and contradictory," it is not certain that the increase will be "held up in court if challenged." He hoped that the University would accept the letter.

members of the University public, its alumni, and its friends. Through its open-door policy, the University is well-stocked with the aspirations and advantages of the University; it opens its gates to all who seek to serve. Then, too, public counlability is essential to the University's mission and its goals. Sheehan explained, "to whose suffrance it exists and whom it is responsible to the various publics at home and abroad."

The term "public" is used in a broad sense, encompassing the University's entire community and to media relations experience and expertise in student affairs, and the Wharton School. Miss King also helped arrange interviews with visiting lecturers, and, inevitably, "news-in-brief." The function of the Public Relations Office is to "always publish." Often, "it's duties of the public relations office are not finished even after reading a press release. The television office assists national and local networks making documentaries on campus, and provides information on programs and activities."

The Public Relations Office: Creating the University's Image
President Meyerson's recent decision to scrap his old proposal for an Intercollegiate Council of the President's Conference—a body possessing a broader administrative power than any new committee—will be a disappointment to many. Hopefully, it will facilitate an easier communication among the various components of the University's upper echelons—a communications flaw from which all members of the University may profit.

The most welcome addition to the President's Conference—which Meyerson envisages as "a clearinghouse for sharing knowledge on present and potential programs"—is the presence of a "liaison" to the athletic department. This provision of the amendment—once the last word in any legislative body—will allow the President to consult regularly with the members of the Conference who can benefit.

Both President Meyerson and Provost Reitz have repeatedly complained of Council's penchant for passing "bylaws"—a process which, they say, is distorting the institution. The wording of the amendment—which was the last to be passed by the President's Conference, a body which will have more than 30 members—may prove to be too misleading.

In a recent statement to the Student Council, President Meyerson promised that making only one small deletion—may have introduced some confusion into the amendment. The University emphasizes on intercollegiate administration through the creation of its new athletic committee. Council has shown itself capable of making the least and most effective support for intercollegiate athletics. Although the amendment should be read for compatibility with "the overall goals and educational policies of the University," it is an unrealistic view of the probability that people would register for one of the courses on the basis of their "reading list." The alternative, to purge these courses and the faculty from the curriculum, is more than 30 members of the Conference, a body which will have more than 30 members, may prove to be too misleading. The question of the athletics department's position is not any other student or students) be deemed to overlook the continued violation of the rules. The same announcement was in-...

Philo regram on "the philosophy of Psychology" which is open to department majors only, has reached half of Segal's desired quota of 12. "This course would probably fill up if I open it to non-majors," Segal declared.

When asked if the registration figures were encouraging, Segal replied, "I don't respond to things that happen; I respond to any of this, I just offered a course like anybody else...it's all very sad, but it's a lot better than nothing." Dr. Kenneth W. Rothe associate dean of the College and a member of the Executive Committee that is looking heavily at their favorite courses, commented that the courses will be looking heavily at their favorite courses, and all those present at the discussion will want to see them offered.

"There are almost more examples of students' desire for graded courses. The courses you can't take for (College) credit than the ones that you can. The example here is the one course in being offered by one of our own (College's) faculty members." Segal said he didn't know if philosophy would be dropped if it proved to be a failure. Dr. Mark Sagoff, with an own class (the College's) faculty members, could not be reached for comment.

The University and the Fiddly Back will be the venue for an ice hockey game in honor of the Graduation Hospital. The match will be the 13th annual meeting between the University and the Fiddly Back, and the proceeds will go to benefit the Graduation Hospital.

The Intercollegiate World Hockey Association (IWA) is organizing the game, which is scheduled to take place on February 15 at 7:30 p.m. at the Graduation Hospital. The game will feature a combined team from the University of Pennsylvania and the Fiddly Back, representing the interests of both institutions. The proceeds from the game will be used to support the Graduation Hospital.

The Intercollegiate World Hockey Association (IWA) is organizing the game, which is scheduled to take place on February 15 at 7:30 p.m. at the Graduation Hospital. The game will feature a combined team from the University of Pennsylvania and the Fiddly Back, representing the interests of both institutions. The proceeds from the game will be used to support the Graduation Hospital.

The University and the Fiddly Back have a long history of friendly rivalry in ice hockey. The two teams have played each other in numerous games over the years, with the University often coming out on top. However, the Fiddly Back has always been a tough opponent and has provided a competitive challenge for the University's players.

In addition to the main game, there will be a charity raffle and a silent auction at the event. The proceeds from these events will also be used to support the Graduation Hospital. The raffle will feature a variety of items, including sports memorabilia, gift certificates, and other prizes.

Tickets for the game are available at the door for $5 each, or $10 for two tickets. Children under 12 years old will be admitted free of charge. Door prizes will also be available at the event, and there will be refreshments available for purchase.

The game is expected to draw a large crowd, and fans are encouraged to come out to support the Graduation Hospital and enjoy a friendly rivalry between two local teams. The Intercollegiate World Hockey Association (IWA) is excited to host this event and hopes that it will provide an enjoyable and memorable experience for all attendees.
