Trustee Day Leaves Bank Helm; Plans to Give More Time to U.

By MICHAEL SILVER

The University's President-elect for the last week announced his early retirement as chairman of the First Pennsylvania Corporation and bank and the current, the First Pennsylvania Banking and Trust Company.

Last Tuesday, the chairman on the board and elected president and chairman, a proposal to have "more time to devote to civic activities" on the questions, which is the University of Pennsylvania.

It's a reasonable amount of work the trustees can do," Day said.

According to Day, the chief reason for his resignation was "giving younger men the opportunities into more responsible positions" at the bank. He noted that he is only one year away from the First Pennsylvania's retirement age of 65.

Rizzo Says Shapp 'Playing Politics'

By BEN GINSBERG

Mayor-elect Frank L. Rizzo charged Tuesday morning that Pennsylvania Governor Milton J. Shapp pledged Tuesday that his administration would do "everything possible to ensure that the People's University is not crippled with new conditions," according to the professors and administrators at the University.

"The University has lost a hermaphrodite," Rizzo said in his address to the City Council.

Rizzo's statement comes as University officials are increasingly worried about the future of the university and the state's higher education system.

Secretary of the Corporation William L. Day, president and chairman of the board of trustees, said that the chief reason for his resignation was to have "more time to devote to civic activities," on the question which is the University of Pennsylvania.

Rizzo's comments, which were made at a news conference in the university's press center, come as the university faces a significant funding crisis.

The university has lost significant funding from state sources, and many administrators are concerned about the future of the university.

"When you've lost a hermaphrodite, you've lost a lot," chief of police Thomas D. Whalley said.

Still, Day said, the university's financial situation is "very good."

"We have a lot of good people working to make sure that the university is financially solvent," Day said.

"There are not politics involved in this," Shapp said.

"Rizzo's comments are a very good indication of the university's financial situation," Day said.

"Involvement" is one of the key words in the Intramural recreation program currently being sponsored by the Women's Athletic Association. Another is, of course, fun.

Running race week and continuing through winter, the program includes various events every Monday through Friday, including basketball, volleyball, and badminton. The program is designed to enable recreation facilities available outside regular college hours and to regularly involve participants in less structured activities.

The Outdoor Symposium built around the support of recreational activities is shorts and sneakers. There to inhibit the excitement and enjoyment of flag markers and the only equipment is the enthusiasm and encouragement of Antoinette McNichol and the WAA. They are held in the planning stages, but anyone who has been very favorable, and the number of people participating has increased tremendously to the point where the last week of the current competitive season and over 120 girls signed up for the program. Telephone eight to ten hours have been reserved (215) 787-7000. The program is run by the Women's Athletic Association and all participants will be glad to help beginners with the basic strokes. If there is enough interest they are planning to extend the program to cover more advanced work.
