Budget Comm. Halts Hiring Freeze; U. Obtains Federal Price Guidelines

Hobstetter Recommends Unic. Appropriates Funds For Filling Current Faculty Vacancies

By CHAT BEAZLEY

The freeze on faculty hiring which was instituted by the University in August and modified in December is now, in effect over. The Presidential Budget Committee voted Tuesday to recommend to President Novotny that the same amount of money appropriated for federal students for the year be appropriated for next year as well. The move would produce a savings of $150,000, the amount of money which has occurred since August when hiring was virtually stopped. The committee did not make specific recommendations but they should be spent, but did suggest that the site of the faculty be allowed to be increased by August strength.

The more follows December committee recommendation that adequate funding be appropriated to fill faculty vacancies and that money be re-allocated for the new fall.

Faculty committee chairman John Seely said "We are modifying the committee's recommendation. The decrease in faculty size is far too small. We are recommending that the decrease not be recommended."

Hobstetter added, however, that the decision on how to increase in faculty size will largely depend on how much they are going to resign the site of the faculty at the last meeting and that any additional faculty will be filled in a way so that all vacancies--

A leadership crisis which had threatened the Philadelphia Bicentennial Corporation during the past two weeks appears to be resolved. Tuesday, after a lengthy meeting of the bicentennial corporation's executive counsel for the corporation's board of directors, Bunting and Evans agreed that Bunting would remain as executive counsel for the bicentennial corporation board of directors.

In response to "a growing interest in the bicentennial and the bicentennial corporation," the two agreed to continue to serve as executive directors of the corporation.

"A hearing of Evans' charges, Philadelphia Mayor Frank Rizzo demanded Evans and have them removed from his Bicentennial board."

Bunting also said that when a new program is completed in April, there will be no budgetary unworkable. We would have had to file for an exemption," he claimed, "This is the reason we are so pleased to have our budgetary unworkable."

signifies the individual college's "recognition of black studies as a institutionalized field," Ford said.
This is a major consideration to most faculty members who support the program, and it is the reason why the program is so important to the black community.

On the other hand, Ford pointed out that the preponderance of "in compatible programs have departmental status.

Turning to the advantages of the interdisciplinary approach, Ford said faculty recruitment is easier under such a system because a new faculty member does not have to be hired just to take care of tenure arrangements.

"We are faculty members who refuse to take an appointment in a black studies program department because of the tenure issue," he said.

Since the loyalty of faculty members is divided between the black arts program and the department which originally hired them, the black studies program is consequently looked on as an "affluent program."

Ford suggested giving the director
the right to hire and fire faculty members, even under the interdisciplinary approach.

The strength of the semi autonomous black studies school, Ford said, is that "some things could only be done here," citing the weekend college programs and special courses for prisoners, prisoners and drug addicts.

The potential "problems" for Philadelphia-area colleges, in turn,
tend to be limited to the funds
such as exist in the nation.

Strengthening Undergraduate Education

By HERBERT CALLEN

The University of Pennsylvania, a premier institution with a long tradition of excellence, faces significant challenges in its mission to provide a high-quality education to all students. The crisis of the 1960s, with its emphasis on social justice and civil rights, has led to a reevaluation of the university's role in society. This context highlights the need for a comprehensive approach to strengthening undergraduate education, which is crucial for the university's future success.

One of the primary problems facing the university is the lack of adequate resources to support the needs of all students, particularly those from underprivileged backgrounds. The university must address this issue by investing in initiatives that improve access to education and enhance the overall educational experience.

Another challenge is the need to adapt to rapidly changing educational technologies and trends. The university must develop new programs and curricula that are responsive to these changes while maintaining a commitment to traditional values and academic excellence.

To address these challenges, the university should consider implementing the following strategies:

1. Increase Access to Education: Expand financial aid programs to ensure that all students, regardless of their financial situation, have the opportunity to pursue higher education. This includes expanding merit and need-based scholarships, as well as providing support for students from underprivileged backgrounds.

2. Enhance Educational Technology: Invest in technology to improve the educational experience. This includes providing students with access to the latest tools and resources, as well as developing new programs that utilize technology to enhance learning.

3. Foster Student Engagement and Involvement: Encourage student participation in academic and extracurricular activities. This includes creating opportunities for students to engage in research, internships, and other forms of experiential learning.

4. Support Faculty Development: Invest in faculty development programs to ensure that instructors are equipped with the latest teaching methods and technologies. This includes providing ongoing professional development opportunities and resources.

5. Improve Administrative Efficiency: Streamline administrative processes to reduce costs and improve efficiency. This includes implementing new technologies and processes that can improve the university's ability to serve students.

In conclusion, strengthening undergraduate education is essential for the continued success of the University of Pennsylvania. By addressing the challenges facing the university and implementing effective strategies, the university can ensure that all students have the opportunity to achieve their full potential and contribute to the intellectual and cultural vitality of the university and society.

A Non-Scout?

By JAMES R. JOHNSON

Conflict is in the blood. The second major war of the 20th century, and possibly the third, is now underway. The conflict is not only between nations, but between nations and individuals. The conflict is also between the United States and the Soviet Union.

We are in the midst of a crisis that is both urgent and complex. The crisis is not only a matter of military strategy, but also a matter of economic policy. The crisis is not only a matter of national security, but also a matter of international relations.

To address this crisis, we need a new approach to foreign policy. This approach must be based on a realist understanding of the world, a commitment to the principles of democracy and human rights, and a recognition of the importance of economic development.

In conclusion, we must work together to find a solution to this crisis. This will require a willingness to compromise, a willingness to listen, and a willingness to work towards a peaceful resolution. Only by working together can we hope to bring an end to this conflict and to create a better future for all.

The Nixon Administration's strategy for winning the war in Vietnam has been a complex and multifaceted one. The Administration has sought to achieve its goals through a combination of military and political tactics, while also attempting to manage the domestic political pressures that have accompanied the war.

The core of Nixon's strategy has been to create a conditions of ambiguity and political opportunity, which can be exploited by the Administration. This strategy has been implemented through a combination of direct military action, such as the bombings of North Vietnam, and indirect political actions, such as the provision of aid to the South Vietnamese government.

Under a plan formulated by president Emeritus Robert Denny, the University could save $54,496 in appropriations from the Department of Recreation and Intercollegiate Athletics through the sale of all sports equipment, equipment for sporting events and cuts in the department's programs.

As part of its plan to balance the University budget, the administration will call for bids from the best equipment agency's allocation. It also hopes to have the deficit incurred by the Superbowl project turned into a long-term debt.

Stutler said the committee expects to save over $90,000 for the athletic department, as well as $250,000 to apply for scholarships from the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency.

Remember Dave Wohl? You know, the guy who was recruited to Penn as a football player and ended up being named to the starting lineup at a most unexpected position? Well, the story of Dave Wohl's unexpected career at Penn is part of the much larger story of Dave Wohl's transition from college to professional fencing.

Dave Wohl was named to the starting lineup at fencing last year, a position he had never even considered before he arrived at Penn. He had never fenced before joining the Penn fencing team, but he quickly made the transition and became a star on the team.
