LITTLE UNIVERSITY PARKING Area Left Despite High Cost and Low Security

By NANCY SPARKS

Almost all available student parking on campus has been filled, despite high prices and lack of security on some lots.

The number of cars parked at any of the parking lots of the University, hospital, and medical school has increased in the last couple of years, excluding last year. The average number of cars parked in the hospital parking lots of the University in the fall was 4,400 in the fall, with a peak of 5,000 in the spring. The average number of cars parked in the hospital parking lots of the University in the spring was 3,500, with a peak of 4,000 in the fall. New Hillel Director Seeks 'Action-Oriented Ethic'
Institutes Programs for Jewish Cultural Center

By STEPHEN HUGH
Rabbi Michael Monson, a native of Columbus, Ohio and graduate of the Jewish Theological Seminary, has been named director of the University's Hillel Foundation.

Rabbi Monson will serve as the university's director of Hillel this year, and will assume the directorship next year upon the departure of the present director, Rabbi Joel Paul.

Thirty years old, with an extensive degree and tough, background in Jewish education, Rabbi Monson has organized a number of programs which he hopes will integrate "mainstream" Hillel as a religious and cultural center for Penn's Jewish students.

Rabbi Monson graduated from the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, and enlisted in 1944. He presently completing his course work for a degree in Counseling Education and Personal Services from the University of Florida.

Throughout his life, Rabbi Monson has been very deeply involved in Jewish studies and traditions. His past experiences, he feels, have instilled within him a very strong respect and admiration for philosophy. "I have always been able to teach and convey my ideals and in all the experience I have had with the Jewish experience, I have found that the Hillel name has a very unique place," he said. "The name is to be able to convey and teach my ideals and thought, folk dancing, and others."

Specifically, Rabbi Monson is planning a variety of programs, both religious and cultural, designed to attract a larger percentage of the University's Jewish students. Among these are:

- Tuesday evenings, a series of informal Tuesday lunches where students can come to hear speakers on a current topic of interest. Rabbi Monson believes that the experimental services for the Sabbath, to be held Friday evenings and Saturday mornings, will include readings of contemporary poetry, dancing and music.

- Also, in addition to the weekly traditional services, under Rabbi Monson's direction, Hillel in cooperation with the Student Council will provide an experimental service for the Sabbath, to be held Friday evenings and Saturday mornings, which will include readings of contemporary poetry, dancing and music.

- The emphasis of the experimental service, Rabbi Monson explained, is to "combine as much personal input as possible, and to involve the students in the practice of their religious beliefs."

- Rabbi Monson will serve as the chairman of the Investment Committee. The Division of Investments and to advise the Investment Committee.

- "If there is a clear-cut case of a corporation doing something unethical, we should make it known to do with it," he said. "I believe there should be more information and discussion of facts by corporations. We're not unconcerned."

The three patterns in the Franklin Company are Timothy Beach, Jr., vice-president of the College Retirement Equities Fund, David Atkins, vice-president of the Scudder Development Fund, and Thomas Beach, co-founder and president of the Fidelity-Investment Group of the firm of Beach, Widman & Co.

A Woman on liberal arts education

By Donna Lamb

"What is wanted for women is equal rights, equal opportunity to all social and political positions, not a social position, not a sort of sentimental parenthesis." It is not easy to understand how Jewish liberalism and its interpretation of the American Jewish community have been shaped by the relationship with this "sentimental parenthesis." The experience of Jews, as a group in American society, has been characterized by a process of recognition of their rights and responsibilities, a process that has been fraught with tension and conflict.

The collapse of the "traditional" role of women as homemakers and mothers has been a significant factor in the process of liberalization of Jewish thought and practice. Many Jews have substituted an "egalitarian" role for the "traditional" one, while many have continued to maintain a traditional perspective.

The high value placed on "studying for its intrinsic value" is evident in the discussion of the role of women in society. The problem of women's education is seen as a matter of social and political significance, and the need for equal rights and opportunities for women is emphasized.

Jewish education is managed to exist happily for a century and a half at Penn, where Jewish women were respected and appreciated for their contributions to the educational community. The question now must be: In what sense is this "woman's place" intrinsic and essential? The answer to this question is not straightforward, and the process of determining the significance of women's role in society is complex and ongoing.

Urban Plans Debate Slated

By ROBERT RASNER

In this month's meeting of the Activities Council, $7000, raised earlier through student contributions and a special distribution at the beginning of the fall, was returned to the Council. The Council specified that 20 per cent of its surplus of funds for distribution could be made to two organizations: the Penn Players and $2000 to The Ivy Room.

The largest disbursements were $3,127 to the Wharton Undergraduate 1973, and $1,527 to the College Hall 200 Collective and Campus Counseling. Also, two organizations were designated by the Council as the Student Union. The first was 25 per cent of the meeting proceeds from the Student Union for the spring. The second was a request for funds from the class of 1974 for their spring. The exact amounts for these organizations were $900 for the spring and $900 for the class of 1974.

The activities council was presented with a request for funds from the class of 1973 for their spring, but the request was not granted.

Tradition Bars the Tenth Game

By Phil Shimkin

Tears the Delawareans would have right at home in the Ivy League. Tevye, the wise old sage from the musical "Fiddler on the Roof," believed in tradition both personal and national. "Why can't we have one?" the answer seems to be that it somehow violates sacred traditions so there is no chance the Presidents will approve it for some time. Tevye the Dairyman would have been right at home in the Ivy League.

Now if Tevye had been a football coach, tradition wouldn't have been so important to him. As it is, this enlightened says that his team would have been just as good.

The Presidents seem worry that another football game would push the season to late October, which is too late to get the league into the television market. Penn football coach Vox Corrigan said yesterday. "We've presented this proposal regularly to the Ivy League, but not to the Athletic Group. If we present it again they'll vote it down. But they wouldn't vote it down if we presented it to the Athletic Group."

The purpose of maintaining the values of the game in the service of higher education. Football was corrupt. The Ivy League was formed to protect eight schools of higher education. "At least a symbolic issue in that battle," and that a ten game season is "at least on the level it was supposed to be in those idealistic days." You can only go so far to many times. Peer athletic director Dick Covington and Wings president of the Presidents and they just keep repeating. You just don't have any reason to keep going with it. The Ivy League was formed to preserve eight schools of the same ideological position from this area. But that was 10 years ago. "I think the smallest role has overtaken its usefulness," he commented.

The Presidents may not face a tenth game, but all eight Ivy teams have figured out a way to possibly get a sixth game and ten teams will play. The Ivy League has decided to further this plan with the presses. Tradition clung to by many an hard to tell how well they'll do," he maintained that Tailbacks approach is a good way to tell. Dartmouth and Harvard have the sixth of the season," cautioned Seddon. "That was a difficult game for us. We can put the ball in the net. "It will be up to the Quakers' potentially explosive individual talents to hold off Princeton, which has tradition and consistency is an unknown quantity. It's just as true now than even better."
