Black Dorm Termed

By MICHAEL SILVER

The University's first black dormitory was opened last spring.

The dormitory, called "The Black Dorm," is located on the west side of campus, near the administration building.

The dormitory was opened to accommodate the increasing number of black students coming to the University. The first residents were four students: two males and two females.

The dormitory is equipped with all the necessary amenities, including a kitchen, a dining area, and a study room. The resident advisor, a black male student, is available to provide support and guidance to the residents.

The University is committed to creating a welcoming and inclusive environment for all students, and the opening of The Black Dorm is a step in that direction.

Barnard College, a women's liberal arts college in New York City, has announced a new policy that allows students to earn an unlimited number of credits.

The new policy, called "Open Credits," allows students to earn as many credits as they wish, up to a maximum of 120 credits.

According to the college, the policy is designed to provide students with greater flexibility and to allow them to pursue their own interests and passions.

The policy applies to all Barnard students, regardless of major or year level. It is expected to launch in the fall of this year.

University Turns Down

SCB Refund Requests

By PETER KOKO

The Student Consumer Board (SCB) has rejected a request for refunds from a group of students who were dissatisfied with the quality of service they received.

The group, which consists of 25 students, had requested refunds for services that were not up to their expectations.

The SCB denied the request, citing the college's policies and procedures for handling such requests.

The group is considering filing a complaint with the university's Office of Student Affairs.

By ELLIE NOREIKA

The University is considering a new policy that would allow students to take a leave of absence for up to one year.

The policy, which is currently under consideration, would allow students to take a break from their studies for a variety of reasons, including personal or family matters.

The University is expected to make a decision on the policy in the coming weeks.

ADMISSION FREE
Ivy League Now All Coed

Such as Yale, Princeton, and Pennsylvania, strongly in favor of keeping equal admissions on campus. Despite some public concern over the desirability and need for all-women's schools as high as before. Stewart, associate editor of the Harvard Crimson, said, "It is now four to one."

For ten years Radcliffe women have graduated with Harvard diplomas, but Radcliffe continues to have a separate admissions office. Despite the movement to equalize the balance between Harvard and Radcliffe, the effects on campus activities are "yet to be felt," Ms. Bussey said.

Radcliffe, the women's college of Harvard University, was dissolved and made a part of Brown in the summer of 1915, Its once separate admissions facilities, and counseling services are now merged with those of Brown, but according to Bob Stewart, associate editor of the Harvard Crimson, "The policy used in 1933 when the two schools merged has changed" on the Rhode Island campus. Since the mid-1960's Radcliffe's student activities have been fully coeducational, and today's thirty per cent coed housing is what Stewart terms "a logical conclusion." There is "quite a lot of agitation for an equal admissions ratio," Stewart said, and he foresees the applicant pool expanding at a "dramatic pace."

What Stewart and reporter Steven Silverman cite as a "dramatic change" that has resulted to the "normalizing of relationships" between men and women. It has resulted in "more reality" with respect to their female counterparts.

Life, Cornell, Pennsylvania. no longer has a quota on female students. Regional Director of Admissions Clerk Boney notes that this is due in large part to the fact that virtually all University housing is now coed, whereas several years ago, for instance, Radcliffe women were much fewer than those for men. When considering students for admission, "we don't look at whether they're male or female," Boney said.

This totally anti-biased policy of admission is a long way from the policy used in 1915 when the two schools merged. Stewart notes. Brownlee cited "the existence itself long ago the facilities available for women were much fewer than those for men. Although classes were segregated until World War II, the College for Women always shared the same instructors, faculty, and enrollments as the male undergraduate schools. Under President Captiol F. Harvard in the 1001's coedification grew, and by the 1960's it was complete.

Dorothy Brown reported in a letter to Women's Notes that "a cohort for women on this campus" that has grown as the number of Presbyterian women has increased. In the 1930's there were 600 women here; this year there are 2,100. And although women are an integral part of the University community, Dr. Brownlee cited "the existence itself of the College for Women as evidence of "The need for a staff of women for the women here."

Due to competition in the rest of the Ivy League, however, there has been a "subtle pressure" on the applicant pool for the College for Women, according to Dr. Cahan, associate director for data systems in the Office of Admissions. And Clark Boney noted, "There are more girls here, but the quality is now four to one."

The applicant pool for the College for Women has "expanded at a "dramatic pace."

It is significant that more women than ever are being given the chance to attend those institutions of high caliber which were at one time reserved for men only. The secret commission

The University Development Commission has recommended a number of subcommittee reports in the past few weeks, but none has been released by that group for public review. We find this tendency to keep important information behind closed doors most disturbing.

The subcommittee reports contain recommendations in which substantial portions of one of a final Development Commission report. They represent more than eight weeks of work by a score of faculty members and students. Yet these documents, some of them now being considered by the commission, are not available for discussion, much less for criticism by the University community.

Members of the commission say the reports must be kept secret for the time being because they are only preliminary and might provoke mistrust if they were widely circulated. They say the commission might jump to conclusions over recommendations that may only be temporary and form inaccurate ideas on what, exactly, the commission will finally recommend for implementation.

We fear, however, the reports are being checked with some faculty members and administrators, instead of the community, to see if any of the recommendations are offensive or unacceptable. This is particularly disturbing since the commission was established in order to keep the negative political squabbles which have marred so many other committees and watered down so many reports.

Commission members point out that when reports have been released and are being reviewed, they will be made public to the public. But the felons they fear in this preliminary stage would be valuable if the University community were to review them. This, however, will be impossible if the reports simply appear as formal drafts without input from a wide range of students and faculty members.

The danger that the commission will relieve finalized recommendations without outside input is made greater as the commission's deadline approaches. The group is now planning to have all these reports finished by late November. When they are completed, the students will be able to go before the University Council for debate, but University-wide input will be cut to a minimum as the longer these reports are kept secret.

If we were to point out that the commission has a certain responsibility to the University community to be open and honest as possible. Instead of camouflaging potentially valuable information, the commission would do well to make the recommendations of the subcommittees and work as much as feedback as possible. Noticeable relations in the community will affect the entire University, and the commission would do well to have every right to participate in the process leading to reform.

Letters to the editor

The reviewer and the reviewed

As I read the comments of our noted era's theater critic, I was reminded of Grandpa Kahn's letter of October 24th. It especially reminded me of the line on "The Great Gatsby." Kahn, to me, was a great theater critic. I was thrilled to read his letter, for one, not only for the entire High Street Theatre Company, but also for the entire High Street Theatre Company. It is, in my opinion, a great theater, and I am proud to be a part of it. I have passed his two predictions of this particular season, which are no less than two New York Times critics.

Second, Mr. Kahn has told me that he is a good actor. I have been asked to send his letter to the Times. The people at the High Street Theatre Company, as well as his leading man and woman, have no need of your theater. I was told by the President of the Times, who is the same Mr. Kahn, that he is not interested in your theater. I was told by the President of the Times, who is the same Mr. Kahn, that he is not interested in your theater. Inappropriate garbage dump

I am writing to object to the entire Penn community particularly the people who are responsible for Quadrangle's problem, a problem which is not necessarily the only problem. It seems to me that the majority of the people of the Quad are people who have not been active in the Quad and have not made any attempts to make any contributions to the Quad. The people who have been active in the Quad have made some attempts to make some contributions to the Quad. The people who have been active in the Quad have made some attempts to make some contributions to the Quad.

The same concern has been going on in many places. Where the people on the Quad are not interested in making a change, the people on the Quad are not interested in making a change. Where the people on the Quad are not interested in making a change, the people on the Quad are not interested in making a change.

While I am not saying that we should all be like the people who are responsible for Quadrangle's problem, I am saying that we should all be like the people who are responsible for Quadrangle's problem. I am saying that we should all be like the people who are responsible for Quadrangle's problem.

Friars Attempt to Send Mice to College

Along the traditional solicitations for hot dogs, pennants, roses, and football programs, persons attending Saturday's Pennsylvania-Pennsylvania football game may find themselves faced with a rather unusual request: "Send a mouse to college.

The slogan is serving as a theme for a cancer research charity drive being held by the Friars Senior Honor Society in conjunction with the American Cancer Society.

Stemans hopes to send the group's campaign plan to help offer again this student leadership with University and community service.

Stemans said that those wide-scale charity work is currently "almost nonexistent" at the University, "the Friars could provide incentive for other groups on campus to raise their charity efforts."

150's Battle Midshipmen For Share of Lead Harp

By KEVIN MERRILL
Words can't really describe the importance of this afternoon's lightweights football game at Princeton. The Midshipmen from the U.S. Naval Academy (舷 from there) will invade Old Nassau at 2:30, seeking revenge for their defeat at the hands of our local team last year. The game will be a must-win, and not just for the Midshipmen. The Red and Blue must win to keep their hopes alive for a share of the lead in the Ivy League standings.

The game will be a battle of two giants, each with their own unique strengths and weaknesses. The Midshipmen have a reputation for playing tough defense, while the Red and Blue are known for their powerful offense. The game will be a test of which team can outsmart the other and come out on top.

The stakes are high, and the fans are ready to see some exciting football. The game will start at 2 P.M. sharp, and both teams are expected to leave it all on the field. This is a battle that the fans won't want to miss.
