U. Researchers Study Anti-Depressant Drugs

With the number of depressions and anxiety attacks increasing, doctors, nurses, and researchers are being called upon to study the effects of anti-depressant drugs. The results of these studies have been varied, but researchers believe that these drugs can help patients overcome their depression.

The researchers have found that some drugs can be effective in treating depression, while others have not shown significant results.

The data collected in these studies is used to develop guidelines for predicting the outcome of treatment with a particular drug.

The researchers are also looking into the potential of over-the-counter drugs in treating depression.

Dr. Karl Rickets, a University researcher, has been involved with a research project at the University and Philadelphia General Hospital. The project, supported by grants, totalling $283,000 annually, will be conducted at the University and Philadelphia General Hospital.

The project is an extensive study of anti-depressant drugs and their effectiveness in treating depression.

The researchers are not only studying the effects of these drugs but also looking into the potential of over-the-counter drugs in treating depression.

The project is expected to take several years to complete.

The spokesman quoted Richard, now under suspiscous circumstances three weeks after his arrest in Russia, as saying, "We were asked by an investigating magistrate to answer questions on drug smuggling. We are ready to answer these questions in the proper forum."

The spokesman noted that, although the charges were against the Hells Angels, "the drug ring is broader than that," and that more arrests were imminent.

Later raids on the "guitarist Keith Richards and his wife." Stated Mr. Ingersoll, "We will be able to expand the net further in the future if need be." The spokesman cited the network of heroin traffickers as "international heroin traffickers."

"British authorities believe that the drug ring is broader than that," Mr. Ingersoll said, "and we will continue to expand the net further in the future if need be."

The spokesman noted that Richard's alibi was that he had been in London on the day in question, and that the Arziva radio station had been broadcasting that day.

In the meantime, the spokesman issued a statement for the arrest of Richard and his wife, as well as the other four suspects named in the indictment.

Mr. Ingersoll said that since last summer, the drug ring had been operating in the United States, and that the drug was being imported from South America.

The spokesman noted that Richard was believed to have been a leader of the drug ring, and that he was suspected of importing heroin into the United States.
