School Board
And Teachers
Take to TV
Representatives for both the Philadelphia school board and teachers' unions inject fresh issues into the current political arguments and occurrences in a national climate where the attention of the affiliated viewers little hope for a resolution in the conflict.
The first-hour debate, unpar-teled by commercials, was held before an estimated 11,000 to 13,000
service as the teachers strike enters its fifth week.
Neither side offered any ground clear tonight, but the first session focused on what could be seen as a “discussion of the assistance of teachers,” and both sides indicated that negotiators for the other side were working on finding the common ground.
School board negotiators said
promptly before the broadcast, would not consider the highest paid teachers in Pennsylvania and the next highest paid natiodoubter of female fidelity.

The show were two very funny commercial parodies — one lauding Mr. Ed talking to car dealerships in a way that would make them still think about him and the other parodied a television show about a jingle that was being written for a new product.

Once you have seen a Mask and Wig show you can't wait to see the next, and if you didn't see "Take Ten," you missed a

Black Faculty: Politics of Fear

By David L. Lloyd

Mr. Price's complete distortion and misrepresentation of Dr. Crockett's reasonable caveat regarding University policy toward the enrollment of blacks has provided a false image of the student body of the University of Pennsylvania and much of the controversy generated by the enrollment policy. It is not only with a sense of concern but a sense of injustice that I address myself to this issue.

I am sure that Mr. Price is aware of the depth of concern that the present race climate has engendered. The assault on this university's tradition of excellence in education is not without substance. I would like to share my concern with you. If there are a few members who have been ascendantly aloof to Dr. Price's position, I would like to restate the facts.

Before putting down my pen, I want to share one concern that exists with regard to the University's policy toward the education of our black students. As a result, the University community is being misled, and the image of our black commitment and the University is being negatively affected.

It is my hope that this letter will bring to the attention of Mr. Price and the University community the need for an immediate and concrete action to deal with these issues which I address here. It would be a disservice to the University community to ignore these issues.

At this juncture, I would like to express my concern about the University's policy toward the education of our black students. As a result, the University community is being misled, and the image of our black commitment and the University is being negatively affected.

Audience Participation: The Key To Success for 'The Proposition'

By PAUL KAPLAN
Inspector

If you have ever been to a summer camp or a camp for young people of any kind, you realize that participation is a key feature of the event. To the camp directors, the participating children are the 'key' to the success of the camp.

The proposition that we have been discussing is the idea that audience participation is a key to success for 'The Proposition,' a movie that was released last year.

The film, directed by Sissy Spacek, tells the story of a group of young people who form a writers' group and work together to complete a novel. The film is set in a small town in Maine and explores themes of love, friendship, and coming of age.

The key to the success of 'The Proposition' is participation, according to the directors. The movie is not just a story about the writers, but also about the audience. The audience is actively involved in the story, and their participation is essential to the success of the film.

In order to achieve this level of participation, the directors of the film took a number of steps. First, they chose a setting that would be familiar to the audience. They also made sure that the story was relatable, and that the characters were sympathetic. Finally, they made sure that the audience was engaged in the story from the very beginning.

As a result of these efforts, 'The Proposition' was a huge success. It was nominated for several awards, and it was critically acclaimed. The audience participation was a key factor in the film's success.

In conclusion, audience participation is a key to success for 'The Proposition.' Without the active involvement of the audience, the film could not have been as successful as it was. As directors and producers, we must continue to find new and creative ways to involve our audiences in our films.
