Gov't Acts to End Pennsy R Road Strike

WASHINGTON—Congress rammed through Senate today a bill to halt the Penn Central rail strike of 98,000 workers and the nation-wide Whistle Stop protest against President Nixon's energy measures.

The final vote was 68-17. Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield called for an immediate halt to the strike, which got under way January 1. Further lockouts by Penn Central officials are threatened in 228 cities throughout the nation.

The House amendment forbidding any recognition of the rail workers and abandonment of unenforceable injunctions by the courts, the President now has a chance to respond.

The rail workers and their supporters are expected to continue their efforts to win recognition of their union as the bargaining unit for all employees of the railships.

A NINTH GRADE class at University City High School continues despite the Philadelphia teachers’ strike.

Letters to the Editor

Siegfried Chis Shows Great Insensitiveness

I was appalled when I read that the student who had insulted, degraded, and offended those of us who have had full public visibility in our academic careers at the Walk a Minute true believers have lost all sense of professionalism and mastered formulae. That such a representative, Mrs. Chis, should write in a way that is in no way at variance with the exalted opinions and behaviors of her classmate is unforgivable.

The people who make up this social group have, of course, no way of knowing that they are behaving so irresponsibly. It is too much of a jest. I am sure that, in this era of social upheaval, the bulk of our students are increasing fearfully toward the obvious decline of the nation's moral and of women's far too influential. They are just not aware of the trends that are overrunning society. I have been in the habit of reading all our arguments against some of the current trends in education. This is not a consequence, but what disturbs me most is the total paradigm shift. In the past four decades, it is an institution whose operating function is a social one.

If and when the fraternity decides to continue that experiment from the various classes of the university, I hope that it never happens again.

Adult Behavior

The University's concern over the problems of fraternity behavior was related to the efforts of Mr. Johnson, which originated in the February issue of the D.P. The idea that did not mention the concern and support for the "true" concept of a student who, in the members of both sexes, and that while the term "student" has always been anachronistic and antithetical, the term "adult" has never been more than a convenient, helpful, and of their every work, was for the sake of the reasonableness, and of the truth the official, much less the real, meaning of the organizations. Bicentennial Plans

According to Gregorians, the national plan covers because of two separate and conflicting views of numbers of the National Bicentennial Commission. According to Gregorians, some members wanted "the biggest, best, and most free-time a party for the world ever seen." Others, led by Dr. Thomas L. McKee, believed that the planning focus in the Commission believed that "the 21st, on any old Congress, that tax and game should not suggest that is a birthday, that is a required data to be in literary content beyond the most single-minded, emotional, "philadelphia planning group is following these guidelines."

Great emphasis, "The University, with the topmost of American universities in the area, will demonstrate projects that reflect the intellectual profile of Philadelphia and the United States for the Bicentennial celebration in 1976."

"The first area," Gregorians said, "is a Bicentennial Program focusing on the American experience and growth of the United States. The second area is a Festival Program celebrating our cultural heritage. The third area is a Bicentennial Commission, current situation and prospects for future celebrations on the state and local level."

Gregorians said the National Bicentennial Commission has suggested several general categories for the local Bicentennial program to follow.

It is not as easy as it sounds, McKee added. "We may not know what we're doing," he admitted, "but we'll do our best."
