The Student Senate Wednesday issued a resolution expressing its support for the Soviet Union in its current appeal to the United Nations concerning the protection of the Jews of the Soviet Union.

The Senate resolution urges that the United Nations adhibit the appeal to the United Nations and take action to protect the Jews of the Soviet Union.

The U.S. Air Force flew thousands of gallons of fuel into the skies over South Vietnam today to keep the Ranger P-3B above the Cambodian border, American sources said.

The fuel was to be used by the Royal Cambodian Air Force, which is helping to keep the American forces supplied.

$150 Million Asked for Bombing

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense (DOD) asked for $150 million to pay for continued operations Thursday for $160 million to run

English Labor Party

Gains in Local Vote

LONDON — Britain voted in a tight, narrow

Thursday in near-nationwide local government elections that were expected to show major gains for the opposition Labour Party.

Despite a popular lack of interest, politicians were watching the voting closely because they were likely to give the first and final indication of the popularity of Prime Minister

Edward Heath's Conservative

Government since it was grown in 1970.

The voting was for the Greater

London Council — the British Capital's Local Government — on new boroughs, town clerks and councils for other major populaces and industrial cities, and 47 other county councils in England and Wales.

Scotland was the only area of the United Kingdom that did not vote

Thursday. The local elections were scheduled for May.

THE DEVILS
The University and Soviet Jewry

The following statement on the subject of Soviet Jews has been written by a student at the University of Pennsylvania:

The renewed concern of Jews in America and within the University community about Soviet Jewry represents a significant checkpoint in the evolution of the Jewish community in this country. It is clear that the Soviet Union has become a major factor in the Jewish-American consciousness. The Soviet Union, with its rapidly growing economy and the assertion of its economic and political power, has become a symbol of the future of the Jewish people. The Soviet Union's policies with respect to Jewish life and culture are of great concern to the Jewish community. The University, as a center of Jewish learning and culture, has a responsibility to address these issues.

The statement also notes that the University community has a responsibility to consider the role of Jewish students and faculty in the context of Soviet policy. The statement emphasizes the importance of maintaining a strong relationship with the Jewish community, and of working to ensure that Jewish students and faculty have the opportunity to engage in meaningful and fulfilling academic and extracurricular activities.

The statement concludes by calling for a continued dialogue between the University and the Jewish community on issues related to Soviet Jewry. The University community is encouraged to consider the role of Jewish students and faculty in the context of Soviet policy, and to work to ensure that Jewish students and faculty have the opportunity to engage in meaningful and fulfilling academic and extracurricular activities.

Jews for Jesus Ad Draws Comment

With regard for responsible journalism, we are writing in response to the full-page ad promoting the Jews for Jesus campaign which ran in the Wednesday's DP. A publication of any university newspaper that permits the dissemination of such an ad offends a large portion of this university's population.

If this were a commercial operation, our concern would not be whether Jews for Jesus is a guilty or innocent party. But we are dealing with a university newspaper, and it is our responsibility to consider the role of the Jewish community in the context of the university's policies.

The University community should not be allowed to suffer the consequences of the Jewish community's actions. The University community should not have to bear the brunt of the Jewish community's mistakes. The University community should not have to pay the price for the Jewish community's sins.

If the University administration does not take action to prevent such events, we will be forced to consider the role of the Jewish community in the context of the university's policies. The University community should not be allowed to suffer the consequences of the Jewish community's actions. The University community should not have to bear the brunt of the Jewish community's mistakes. The University community should not have to pay the price for the Jewish community's sins.

This is why we are writing, to alert the University community to the problems that have been caused by the Jews for Jesus campaign. We are writing to urge the University administration to take action to prevent such events in the future. We are writing to urge the University administration to consider the role of the Jewish community in the context of the university's policies.

Jews Unite

Two years after a series of letters and editorials attacking the Soviet Union's treatment of its Jewish population, the University of Pennsylvania's Jewish student group, the Pennsylvanian, has once again taken a stand against the policies of the Soviet Union. In a recent full-page ad in the University's student newspaper, the Pennsylvanian, the group has called for a boycott of all products of companies that do business in the Soviet Union.

The ad, titled "Jews Unite," is part of a broader campaign by the Pennsylvanian to raise awareness of the plight of Jewish people in the Soviet Union. The group has been active in fundraising and organizing events to support the boycott. The ad encourages students to boycott products such as Coca-Cola and Pepsi, which the group argues support the Soviet Union's policies.

The Pennsylvanian's campaign is based on the belief that the Soviet Union's treatment of its Jewish population is a violation of human rights. The group argues that the Soviet Union's policies are a violation of the rights of all people, and that by boycotting products of companies that do business in the Soviet Union, students can help to create a public awareness of the issue.

The Pennsylvanian's campaign has been met with mixed reactions. Some students have praised the group for its activism, while others have criticized it for its methods. Some have argued that the boycott is not effective, while others have accused the group of being too radical.

Despite the mixed reactions, the Pennsylvanian's campaign has been successful in raising awareness of the issue. The group has been able to organize events and raise funds to support its cause. The full-page ad in the University's student newspaper is a testament to the group's ability to reach a large audience.

The Pennsylvanian's campaign is a reminder that students have the power to make a difference. By standing up for what is right, students can create a public awareness of important issues and work to bring about positive change.
SCUE Course Guide: ‘Erratic, Confusing’

by PHIL SHIMKIN

The other day a friend of mine came back from a distant city. While he was being educated in one of those lecture courses designed for a cost of thirteen hundred dollars and held in the Yakima auditorium, Lehigh Hall, 13th floor, he decided that he would figure out how much that hour of his time was costing him.

He was taking four courses which added up to 12 hours of class per week, this year he was taking an upperclass course, variously described as an Undergraduate Education, which in summer was supposed to give him tips on how to best utilize his precious tuition money. You may be thinking the same thing yourself.

No, the two dollars is doing something which really will and truly help to broaden your education. Like go purchase a couple of magazines from your local newstand. Or buy a little something for someone and then watch thejavas of education.

What happened in the past week? He was bothered by the nagging feeling that he wasn't getting his money's worth. So, he went to the Student Committee on Undergraduate Education which is supposed to give tips on how to best utilize the precious tuition money. You may be thinking the same thing yourself.

The other day a friend of mine came up with a disturbing statistic. While he was taking a course with Henry Abraham this year? Guess I can't take his course next year? Guess I can't take his course at all? Anyhow, Henry Abraham has been at the University for too long, he has no idea what the future holds. He is one of those missing lines of the past guides. The covers of past guides. The covers of past guides. The past guides had several reviews. How many reviews? Six.

Four Annenberg One-act Plays ‘Entertaining Well Polished’

By JULIE STEEL

Annenberg Theatre Lab is offering four new one-act plays, with a mixture of well-known and semi-well-acted open set plays as their latest production at the Annenberg Center. There are performances tonight and Saturday night as well as a newly added matinee, Sunday at 3 P.M., in the nude Theatre. Viewed as a whole, the evening suffers slightly from expressions in similar theater styles and many characters have been taken in the same program, but each act by itself is an entertaining and well-polished piece of theater.

The first play on the bill is “Twilight” by Bob Kolsby. It is always encouraging to see a student-written work given a chance on stage and Kolsby’s engaging lines are quite witty, but there isn’t as much substance to “Twilight” as there is good timing, comic underplaying, and a show piece for Kolsby’s acting skill. The evening concludes with Charles L. Mee’s “Constantinople,” starring Craig Carlson, who delivers what may be the most successful performance of the evening. Carlson is the virgin, portraying a newly added matinee, Sunday at 3 P.M., in the nude Theatre.
