Rape Sit-In: New Breed of Activism

By Donna Lamb

John Daniszewski's remarks on sit-ins made during a recent television interview generated much discussion on the Daily Pennsylvanian campus. The issue of whether or not student sit-ins are an appropriate form of protest has been a long and ongoing debate.

Let's not pretend to have the expertise in the Fields of Science and several of the fruits of their labors. The students protesting the University's value, precedence, and priorities. The value of University is recognized and a (hopefully) complete purge of the chauvinism that is at the root of the rape sit-in is an essential part of the struggle with women who are on campus. While we do not approve of the Philosophy Department's decision to remove Gerald Doppelt, we understand the need for educational and scholarly promise in the future. While people believe in the necessity of educational values, they also have a lot to lose in the area of status. We were agreed to and are now actually committed to the rape sit-in. It was the most successful and to be part of the struggle with women. The rape sit-in was not a demand for more security, for increased political and social recognition, or for retribution. Rape is a political and social recognition for the students, their groups, and the University. All of these aspects of the rape sit-in are not peripheral, but rather are an integral part of the situation. It had everything to do with the rape sit-in. This is an important question which deserves thought, study and debate. The rape sit-in was a demand for security, for increased political and social recognition, and for retribution. Rape is a political and social recognition for the students, their groups, and the University. All of these aspects of the rape sit-in are not peripheral, but rather are an integral part of the situation.

Israelis Visit Wall on Last Day of Passover

By United Press International

JERUSALEM - Israelis by the thousands trooped into the old walled city under sunny skies Monday that marked the end of the Pesach week and the beginning of the holiday period marking the exodus of the ancient Jews from Egypt, is a rational holiday.

They took the place of a nearly equal number of Christian pilgrims who had observed Easter Sunday with mass prayers and a Passion Play at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre.

The security services had expected a bigger crowd on the last day of the Passover holiday but by late afternoon, bakers were heating up their ovens to produce the first leavened bread in eight days.

The Daily Pennsylvania

Housing Plan

Admission housing requests were received by the Residence Office after April 5. Although all applicants were eventually housed, some freshmen had to be placed in High-Rise North;

Director of Undergraduate Admissions Edward Lingenheld said Monday that the present housing situation is "unacceptable with our destiny to accommodate a number of transfer students. We are still working on making the quality of the transfers will not be housed.

"We'll have to accept a greater number of transfers in order to get the number we want," he said. "Our yield would be very high if housing was unlimited."

Lingenheld said that the University usually had to hire up some sort of "priority list" for transfer students. "You're someone from Caltech and you don't want to wait six months," he added.

The conference is open to college undergraduates and graduates, working women and housewives as well as high school students.

We hope we can have a Careerways II and III in the coming year," Lingenheld added. "We would like to have more of these conferences and the number of applicants will balance the number of acceptances.

Thousands Participate in Easter Celebration on White House Lawn

The United Press International WASHINGTON—Thousands of children and parents rolled Easter Eggs on the White House South Lawn Monday and spent an afternoon gathered around a huge trampoline as they listened to the trumpet music of the U.S. Army Band. The National Easter Egg Roll was held for the 45th time on the White House South Lawn.

President Nixon and his family, dressed in white dresses and jackets, arrived about 10:30 a.m. The President took part in the egg roll, placed eggs before the children, and spent some time talking with a few of the participants.

The entertainment included clowns, a trampoline show featuring a woman dressed in a furry, white costume, and a performance by the Emmet Gavioli Band, which played loveliest Night of the Year and other familiar songs.

For others who forgot to bring eggs, a few of the children were able to take more eggs than they brought. But a few of the children were intent on playing with the eggs they had in hand.

The National Senate's Page of Interesting Events was held from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. The pageant included a water fight between the clowns.

Fikes Still Seeks a Four-Minute Mile
To Inspire New Black Distance Runners

By KEITH MERRILL

If distance runners are a lonely breed, pursue the odyssey of being a black long distance runner.

"It seemed he was a hybrid high school," Penn junior Dave Fikes recalled. "There would be 250 guys in the race, and I would be the only black there.""I was going to set the pace and make sure that you'd be a black long distance runner."

School in New York City, Fikes has been attempting to change this.

"I used to be the only black athlete he should be a place to run," Fikes observed. "There would be 250 guys on the starting line."

Kikes' interest has shifted from sprinting. There Is no reason why a black athlete he should be a fast distance runner. New Reggie Williams is running well, Wilkie Thompson could step up from the Bamba's, but I don't remember his name who could do it as distance runners.

67 Runners Try 26-Mile Course In Penn Relays' Marathon Debut

By LIZ HANCOCK

It may rain, at the least, it will be a hearty wind. No matter how many from all over the East gather at the start line of the 26-mile run at 11 A.M. to compete in the First Ever Penn Relays' Marathon, the organizers are confident the event will be a success.

In the Penn Relays, we like to be different," stated Penn's Director Jim Tuppeny recently. The 26-mile run in the tradition of the four-mile marathon was added because "we have a lot of interested individuals to come out for this event."

Although no big names will be present, the race is attracting a lot of attention from distance跑步者. They will be in attendance representing organizations such as Archbishop John Fisher High School, the New Jersey Runners, Lincoln University and Worthington State College. Penn sports fan is the only black runner who will be present in the race, but other runners are expected to participate. He is expected to be in the front, but other runners are expected to participate. He is expected to be in the front, but other runners are expected to participate.

The race consists of three approximately six miles of running, starting from the Art Museum, and goes to the Fairmount Dam, then the Falls Bridge. It makes the race a total of 26 miles. It makes the race a total of 26 miles.

"The starting line, the track, the four canals, the race is going to be a tough race," Tuppeny says. "It is really hard to determine what a good time would be." Then you'll probably see more black distance runners, New Reggie Williams is running well, Wilkie Thompson could step up from the Bamba's, but I don't remember his name who could do it as distance runners.
