Watergate Jury Ties Mitchell With Bugging

By United Press International

WASHINGTON—The Watergate bug-busting jury watching former Attorney General John Mitchell's trial on charges that he knew about bugging Watergate events cleared through the White House on the day after the Watergate break-in.

The jury, which was deliberating the fate of Mitchell, the man who allegedly carried eight cartons of documents out of the White House the day after the Watergate break-in, met for the last time Tuesday before retiring for the night.

Summer Reading: Reviewer Cleans House

By DAVID AMERICAN

Getting ready for the summer or forever, usually entails a housecleaning of some sort. Even those on, or near the margins of the reading world, will no doubt see the need to (...)

Summer reading has the peculiarity of looking like much more enjoyable in May than in March or April. Nevertheless, we try to avoid a few vigorossimplicity per month—no matter how many books you

The two books particularly interesting to this year are for younger readers and enjoyed by adults as much as the children. "The Cat in the Hat," by Dr. Seuss, and "Green Eggs and Ham," by Dr. Seuss. Both have been publishing for over a decade and are still beloved by many children today. The author is planning to release a new book, "The Cat in the Hat Comes Back," next month. The book tells the story of the cat's return and his adventures with the children. The author's use of rhyme and rhythm make the book enjoyable for both children and adults. The book is expected to be released in June.
SCUE Disputes Education Editorials

Students' Dept.

Is Feasible

By Michele Gale

The April 13 editorial in "Education and Protest" I made many pertinent points concerning the ongoing student demonstrations. The system and priorities of the university are open to contention. Thus far, the results of the sit-in have been little or nothing.

The editorial stated that the student protesters had not yet made many pertinent points. The students, however, have made many pertinent points. This is, however, not an article but an unimportant article.

While the 16 editorial of April 31 states, "All those who are concerned about the quality of students' education in the University are acting in a purely altruistic sense", there is no mention of the need for students to act in a more professional sense in order to secure a proper education. The demand, however, remains unanswered. The demand is for a proper education, and this demand has been met.

Lastly, the editorial is imperative in the argument that the system of education must be prepared to receive the students, their ideas and arguments. The University must be prepared to receive the students, their ideas and arguments. The University must be prepared to receive the students, their ideas and arguments. The University must be prepared to receive the students, their ideas and arguments. The University must be prepared to receive the students, their ideas and arguments.

Laxman Brookstein Isn’t Too Small To Show His Skills Against Tigers

By RUDY ROSEN

Laxman Brookstein, Columbia’s 6-foot-3 1/2, 205-pound junior guard, centers for the Quakers against the Boston Celtics tonight. Brookstein isn’t too small to show his skills against any opponent, according to Red Auerbach, Boston’s coach.

"Jay’s been an excellent leader by example," said Auerbach. "He’s got a lot of depth, and in particular have a lot of experience." Auerbach makes no excuse for Red Auerbach’s comments. He’s been around the block a few times and knows what it takes to win.

"A guy like him is the bright spot in the Detroit Pistons," said Auerbach. "They’ve got a lot of talent, but they’ve got a lot of problems also. We think he’s a guy who can help us."

"If I were to hire an assistant coach, I’d hire him," said Auerbach. "He’s got a lot of experience, and he’s a good leader." Auerbach’s comments are not just limited to the Pistons. He has also been involved in the search for a new assistant coach.

"I expect that the Pistons will have a new assistant coach by the end of the week," said Auerbach. "I expect that the Pistons will have a new assistant coach by the end of the week."
