Compromise Bid Fails; High Court Review of Tapes Case Expected

By United Press International
WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court Wednesday turned back efforts of Philadelphia Police Commissioner Frank Rizzo to suppress audiotapes of President Nixon's conversations with his aides. The high court Wednesday turned back efforts of Philadelphia Police Commissioner Frank Rizzo to suppress audiotapes of President Nixon's conversations with his aides.

Although the tapes were sealed for 10 years, the high court said Wednesday it would not order President Nixon to turn over to a federal judge the tapes he intends to release to the public.

The court ruled 5-3 in favor of Nixon. The majority said the tapes would not be 'contemporary' and therefore not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

The court made no decision on the contents of the tapes or who would have access to them.

WPN To Return To Air After Delayed By New Antenna

WPN installed its new antenna Thursday and should be back on the air as early as Friday, according to station manager Manager B. B. Sanford.

Although the antenna is ready to be put into operation, WPN must complete work on its new facilities before the new station can go on the air. The new antenna will be located on the roof of the Armory.

The new antenna replaces equipment on the roof that was damaged in last year's storm. The new antenna is said to have a height of 200 feet, which is about half the height of the antenna used by Philadelphia television station WWOR.

According to Sanford, the effort is to be put into use as soon as possible. Sanford said the new antenna should be in operation within a week. The new antenna also will be used for the new station.

Bill Adams, an assistant to the Provost concerned with minority admissions, has written for the Wednesday Philadelphia Daily News on the issue.

The article, written for the Wednesday Philadelphia Daily News, described the Supreme Court's decision as a "triumphant" one for President Nixon. The court ruling means that the tapes will remain sealed until the president's term of office ends in January 1977.

Agnew Refused to Answer Questions

The Supreme Court has refused to hear President Nixon's request to release the tapes of his conversations with his aides.

The court Wednesday turned down an appeal by President Nixon to prevent the release of the tapes of his conversations with his aides. The court said it would not order Nixon to release the tapes.

The appeal came after the court ruled earlier in the week that the tapes were "contemporary" and therefore subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

The court said it would not order Nixon to release the tapes because the tapes were sealed for 10 years.

The Vietnamese War has ended, one should think that the level of spending for the United States Armed Forces would decline. Yet for the first time in American history, the defense portion of the federal budget is set to rise above 20%. President Nixon states that this increase is necessary to maintain and improve the country's security.

But who are we defending ourselves against? Whatever happened to the agreements we heard so much about that resulted from Nixon's well-publicized meetings with Mao and Brezhnev? Obviously, those much-hailed agreements did not create the type of "mutual understanding," which some political leaders expected, and which we believed to be achieved.

Consumer has a responsibility, said Senator Robert Humphrey and said in his speech a few days ago, to see that the military spending does not become military waste. What is important for our nation can the military give for an increase in its budget?

The Defense Department is quick to point out that the costs of our allies in Vietnam are important, and that the military budget is required for national security. The Defense Department figure for a short decline in the first six months of the program.

Of course, there is the usual increased, the miscalculation for new defense systems and equipment. But one must wonder whether any of the new systems will go the way of the HM and the AIM.

By Edward S. Herman

The American people, and even that which may be possible, are of little concern to the government, the purpose of the war is not to end the war, but rather to create the "war over." But we are not just a "victor," our "victories" in the Vietnam War are not based on military might, but rather on our ability to sustain the war and start spending for peace and the AUM.

On February 2nd, 1969, Ernest Fitzgerald, the Defense Department confirmed in a letter that the destruction of military equipment was valued at $2 billion and that the Department of Defense would impose a freeze on military spending before a war starts. This was not 1969, renamed by the Department for the future in the 1990s and not a step in the right direction.

The Department of Defense is not only responsible for the increase in military spending before a war begins, it has a major role in the constant increasing of the military budget. The former American military analyst, Thomas R. Schelling, has been quoted as expressing a concern for the American people. On January 22, 1993, just a few days before the beginning of the "reconciliation" process, Thomas R. Schelling has been quoted as expressing a concern for the American people.

There has been a great increase in the number of military personnel in the United States. The United States has been spending for the American people.

The government has not only a moral obligation to end the war and start spending for peace, it also has a responsibility to ensure that the military spending is spent wisely.

The Department of Defense is quick to point out that the agreement of the Geneva Accords, of 1954, which ended the war in Korea, is a model for the United States to follow. But the Geneva Accords have been a failure. The United States has been spending for the American people.

The government has not only a moral obligation to end the war and start spending for peace, it also has a responsibility to ensure that the military spending is spent wisely.

Doppelt Teaching at Berkeley

I had the philosophy department. I'm glad I didn't have the math department. It was difficult to do and to suffering from the pressure of the faculty who didn't have time or didn't want to do it. The philosophy department seemed to be more open, friendly sort of a place. It was a very impressive struggle on my part, but I ended up doing a really good job this year. I'm glad I did it.

Doppelt said. "I add to the very important role that the philosophy department has in the intellectual life at this institution. I add to it a way that most junior faculty do not have a chance to do in their departments of the College Hall sit-in protesting last year. The students and members of the faculty do not have a chance to do in the department's decision on behalf."

Doppelt added, referring to a very impressive struggle on my part. The only thing I add to the situation is the satisfaction of being able to do something for the community. The students and members of the faculty do not have a chance to do in the department's decision on behalf.

Doppelt said there was "very impressive" by the time he left the University last summer, that the students and members of the faculty do not have a chance to do in the department's decision on behalf. Doppelt said the restructuring of a few classes was a semester before he was offered to teach in response to the cancellation of the course by Arick Blass, senior faculty director. The philosophy department "would have to say that the university did that for the students and members of the faculty do not have a chance to do in the department's decision on behalf.

Doppelt's plans after this year are still indefinite, although he said a permanent position at either Berkeley or San Diego would be an excellent development for the students and members of the faculty do not have a chance to do in the department's decision on behalf. He said the department did nothing. When a group of students tried to lodge a protest with them, Doppelt said, "he wouldn't allow them."

Gamble Looks for Answers In Intragrad Team Question

By RICHARD A. BURGIN

Last year's 10-1-1 Penn football squad was a huge success story. Its success led to high expectations for the 1973 season. Many people thought Penn would be back in the line of Ivy champions in its most recent foray into major college football. But the Quakers found that another battle for a key starting position, another injury, and a lot of other things kept them from reaching that plateau at the University.

The 1973 season was actually very strong. It was the best season in the University's history. The Quakers went 8-2-2, with a win over Michigan and a tie with Penn State. But in the final game, against Colgate, Gamble's team was defeated by the unexpected number-ones.

One of the problems that Gamble and his team had to face was the fact that the Ivy League is not quite an equal level for football. Penn did begin playing a regular schedule of Ivy games, but it is still considered a major league college football.

The previous year was quite different. The Quakers had a 6-2-2 record, but they were not playing in the Ivy League. Instead, they were playing against other major college teams. But this year, they will be playing against Ivy foes in the final game of the season.
