Action Delayed

In Rackin v. Suit Against Univ.

Pretrial proceedings have been delayed over the summer. Professor of English Phyllis Rackin's discrimination suit against the University, filed last May, has been delayed over the summer. However, University motions to dismiss the suit have been denied, and in a protective order against actions that might prejudice the University have delayed proceedings until this winter.

All pretrial motions and interrogatories have been quashed, because of the University's delay in complying with a July 11, 1979, orders. The University's motion to dismiss the suit was denied by Judge Charles W. Merchant; however, the notice to dismiss is not the end of the story, because the University has not yet been properly served. If the motion to dismiss is denied, the University has a right of appeal on the question of whether the suit is properly before the court.

The suit charges that numerous academic and institutional rules, however, are being applied unequally to men and women. The suit challenges the University's denial of tenure to Professor of English Phyllis Rackin. The suit seeks a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which mandates that universities provide equal treatment to all faculty members.

More Minorities, Women Sought by Law Vice Dean

By JANET NOVACK

Frank N. Jones, the new Vice Dean of the Law School, believes "the law school's responsibility is not to select female and minority students as part of an affirmative action policy." In an interview Monday, Jones, the first black to hold the post of vice dean, stressed that "there is no question that the school should continue to make efforts to have more women and minorities." He added that "the discrimination in providing legal services to all Americans, Jones said that before he accepted his position here in August to staff the 12-person plan for student selection and related programs. He said his job is to help the University is taking in this area and that it was "still in the infancy of its work." He added that the University's plan of recruitment is the "dual admissions plan" which awards a "dual admission to law school." The plan is 15 percent black of the total student body.

FRANK JONES

New Law Vice-Dean

"While I'm not an important index of men's ability for law school, it's the only one," he explained. Before coming to the University, Jones served as Executive Director of the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, an organization which works with programs in 21 counties across the country. This is his first job at a university.

He was also Deputy Associate Director of the 1969's Office of Legal Services and served as a defense lawyer for the NAACP in Jackson, Mississippi. "Poverty and civil rights laws" have always been his principal interest.

Jones joined Chicago Teacher's College and was a visiting professor at DePaul University National Law School who engaged as a teacher in poverty law community on the north side of Chicago. He also holds a 1.P. degree in criminal justice from New York University School of Law, where he was an Arthur Garfield Bays Fellow.

"I believe the school has to be more responsive to the needs of the students and the society," he said.

Rackin Suit Delayed

Construction of a new building for the Rackin Law Firm in the 1980s has been delayed. The firm, which plans to move to a new building in the 1980s, has not yet received a permit from the city. The suit was brought by a group of local residents who opposed the expansion of the Rackin building.

Another departmental vote was taken, this time in secret, resulting in a 12-7 vote against Rackin. The case was then appealed to the College Committee on Academic Freedom, which concluded that Rackin's position on the law school was not inconsistent with the committee's policy. The vote was 12-7 in favor of Rackin.

The Need for Student Involvement

By Susanna Sturgis

On October 9, the class of 1970 will elect its representatives to the Undergraduate Assembly.9

At stake will be two positions of the highest vote total in all of student government. The Undergraduate Assembly of the University of Pennsylvania, that body of students which advises the president of the University, will meet on November 15 for the first time this year to conduct a fresh round of elections.

For the first time in its brief history, the Graduate Assembly, which has so far failed to fill its full complement of members as paid by the Constitution, that body of students which advises the president of the University, will elect representatives to the Undergraduate Assembly.

Newly elected representatives will assume their duties on the Assembly at its meeting on November 15. The body will meet again on the first Monday of each month for the rest of the year, during which period it will conduct its affairs.

Friedman who wish to run for seats on the Undergraduate Assembly can receive their nomination forms at any of the undergrad offices or on or after September 30. The nomination forms must be turned in by October 15.

Both representatives will serve a one-year term, effective October 9.

Racetracks are now an integral part of New Bolton's program, and they are the center of the center's activities. The Kline Center is run in part by an association of council members who raise funds for the maintenance of the center and breeding fields. The object of the council members is to provide adequate exercise stalls.

According to Dr. Robert Marshak, executive assistant of the research department, which studies horse breeding farm in the nation, the Bolton complex is principally used in promoting an animal's health. Through this system, the animal can wake up and walk around in the water as well as in the exercise stalls. Such facilities are available for larger animals.

One of the recent additions at New Bolton is the Kline Center, designed to provide innovative methods in treating orthopedic problems in large animals. It includes a full-size deep-water swimming pool which is used in promoting an animal's recovery. After a leg operation, a horse recuperates from a lameness more easily, and the Kline Center encourages this method. The Kline Center is open to the public, and the public is welcome to visit and learn more about the center's activities.

Every September as, in the sports section of the Sunday Times right next to the comic strips, you're likely to see a football article, usually written by Dan Murphy, reviewing the cold game and tradition of the Ivy League. But not this year. The featured team was Penn, and it wasn't even mentioned in the article. So far this season, the Quakers have played a total of nine games, and they're looking forward to a homecoming against Yale, who last year were a powerhouse in the Ivy League. This year, the Quakers are in a much better position to win. According to head coach Tom Scott, the team is much better than last year. "We've had a few senior losses, but we also have some new players who are ready to step up and make a difference," Scott said. "We're looking forward to the challenge and the opportunity to prove ourselves against Yale." The game is scheduled for Saturday afternoon, and fans are expected to fill the stands to support their team. It's sure to be an exciting match, and we can't wait to see what happens. Let's go, Quakers!"
