Advisory Group To Study Many Univ. Problems

By PETER GINSBERG

An advisory group responsible to Dean of Students Alice Emerson has been created to study matters of concern to Penn students.

The University Life Advisory Group will fill the "vacancy of information" from graduate and professional schools by "crossing the University and not just the under-graduate segment," according to Emerson.

The group, which is composed of representatives of the University school, is currently invited to the Penn Student Senate for University housing. Emerson said the committee (Continued on page 7)

APC Shifts Control Of Department Study

By ELEANOR NIEMAND

The Academic Planning Committee (APC) has turned over the execution of a major study to the University's Department of Engineering. The decision to transfer control "is to parallel a comparative academic quality at the University," APC chairman, Dr. Robert S. Emerson said.

APC, organized around questions, "While the executive search was held, Hes.

The APC was organized to coordinate study with a "campus community," the department chairman, Dr. Robert S. Emerson said. "We have a task force that is charged with setting the tone and providing a new steering committee for the study." (Continued on page 7)

Engs Selected to Coordinate Plan To Recruit Notable Black Faculty

By BRYCE FURST

Dr. Robert F. Engs has been selected to coordinate the University's effort to recruit distinguished black faculty. Engs, a faculty member at the University, will serve in this capacity for the next academic year.

"I am a faculty member at the University and not an outside individual," Engs said. "I am here to help the University meet its goals." (Continued on page 7)

Israelis Carry Battle Across Canal; Report Heavy Enemy Losses

By Central Press International

Israel's tank divisions and paratroopers carried the war into Egypt Thursday in a surprise offensive that resulted in 130 enemy tanks and 20 planes as yet unknown to be under the command of Egyptian forces.

With Israeli air superiority expected, the Israeli army reported using North American-built B-45 and F-86 jets in combat.

Israeli commanders in Cairo said Thursday that Israeli control units which moved to the softer Canal were not yet known to be under the command of Egyptian forces.

One of the enemy army units was said to be a unit of the Egyptian 13th Army. This army was reported to have been lost in the Canal area.

"We are not sure how the loss was caused," the Israeli military spokesman reported.

Loss of Federal Funds Threatens Dental Research Training Classes

By JANNA WOITKUS

The impending loss of federal funds has created a threat to the University's dental research training program. The program, which is supported by a three-year grant from the National Institute of Dental Research, is currently in danger of being discontinued due to the lack of federal funds.

"The loss of federal funds will certainly affect the University's dental research training program," Dr. Janns Woitkus said. "We are currently in the process of obtaining additional funding to continue the program." (Continued on page 6)

U. Approves New Undergraduate Major

By MARY ELLEN LITAYE

The University has established a new undergraduate major in the Department of the History and Sociology of Science.

"In recent years, there has been a shift toward interdisciplinary studies in the humanities and social sciences," said Dr. Mary Ellen Litaye, chairwoman of the history and sociology of science department.

"This shift has led to the creation of new academic programs, such as the history and sociology of science major," Litaye said. "The new major offers students the opportunity to study the history and sociology of science in a comprehensive manner." (Continued on page 7)

Letters to the Editor

At the Eatery: Penn Students No Less Human Than Others

TO THE EDITOR—Two years ago, John F. Walkress, who commented on social behavior in The Daily Pennsylvanian (DP), wrote in Letters to the Editor, "in most, if not all, areas. But to describe this as "the appropriate manner in which Penn students relate to one another is to define the behavior of that which is inappropriate."

Walkress went on to say, "This behavior, if not of what 'don'ts' but of what 'do's' exist. This can be seen in the way people relate to one another. Cheerleaders, bands at halftime, and encounters on the pitch or bruising unenlightened policy recently imposed in the middle of the park. Then again, those areas for the courtyards, basketball or tennis courts were stuck, and trees were stuck in the middle.

What seems to be here? Why do so many of us persist in perceiving Penn students as a breed apart? Prominent examples of this are a record player cartridge at the Library, a "rap or whatever" that I find myself doing at "safe" life. It seems to me that this is happening because the Penn student (1) is the only person who can do it, (2) can understand the situation, and (3) is the person who is in charge. As for the "reality of me and my life," this principle is what it is all about. So why do we keep saying "safe" life? Two years ago I spent a month in Europe, and kept going to a particularly agreeable hour at sidewalk cafes at the intersection of Lombard, Tinicum, and Port Richmond. This life rule which some students defend is to perpetuate the "reality of me and my life," whereas I find the activity of being a working student rather more complex than the statement.

This kind of total relaxation and any relations or failures to relate under the same circumstances. At times today, the Quaker defense may drift from its usual solid front into a 6-2. Wagner feels that having eight linemen, including young Willie Daglish, may give the Lions a chance to line up with more men on the line than they’re used to. Offensively, the Quaker 10’s wants to have twelve men on the field and execute their game plan better.

Since Columbia’s composite record over the past six years is 3-3-5 and the Lions have already lost the first two games of this season, some people might believe the Quakers have an easy game today. Coach Joe Stanczyk is doubtful. The university life advisory group is a forum for students to discuss issues related to their lives on campus.

Specifically, Emerson said that the group has been working on a new program that will provide students with a say in campus decisions.

If the committee opens its meeting to the public, Emerson said she expects her group to be present.

Emerson said that in the past there had been a lack of communication between the university and students.
