By Jack Nicholson
WASHINGTON - key House Democrats began preparing the formal articles of impeachment against President Nixon late yesterday, although the House, which starts its five-week vacation today, will not return to Congress to vote on the articles until next month at the earliest.

Although House Majority Leader Carl Albert, Oklahoma Democrat, was not available for comment last night, a Democratic source said the committee on which Mr. Albert serves is

Sinai Front: Elements Of Absurdity, Boredom

By Peter Schumann
Great Neck, N.Y. - The Sinai front is a sight that haunts most soldiers who have been in battle. For them it is a reminder of the horror and the senselessness of war. It is a place where the mind is filled with questions that have no answers.

Sinai: A View From the Front

By Neil Sheehan
Washington - The Sinai front is a place of contradictions. It is a war that has been fought for several years, yet it seems to have less meaning than any other war in recent memory. It is a war that has been fought by many countries, yet it seems to have less impact on the world than any other war in recent memory. It is a war that has been fought by many leaders, yet it seems to have less influence on the future than any other war in recent memory.

Quadrilia Cutting Policy Modified In Response to Student Protest

The University has modified its Quadrilla cutting policy in the wake of vocal student protests over the University's move to install new security lighting. The decision was announced Saturday by the University's security director. The new policy requires the University to notify the local police department of any proposed cutting of the Quadrilla. The University will also consult with the Quadrilla management to ensure that the cutting is done in a manner that will not cause disruption or inconvenience to students.

A Talk With the Mayor

Q: What are the biggest problems you’ve heard in Mayor and what are the biggest problems you foresee in the future?

A: First off, you know being mayor is tough, I think I know it all. But I’ll admit this, I don’t. When I took the government over it was unbelievable, administratively it was unbelievable. The thing that you mess with the budget and you get an $80 million deficit, you’ve had it. It’s long gone.

The biggest problem for all of us is that the work is government is that in our opinion and in the open ground where buildings once stood, there are the people who live in the neighborhood of our city that are going to stay. They’re going to have a hard time. This is what happened when we had the buildings torn down. And we’re going to do that well be able to prove it, a lot of money is going to be spent.

We got hundreds and hundreds of people who left our city and moved to the suburbs. When I was young, you’re growing up. The suburbs surrounding Philadelphia were all open fields. Now we have people growing up around our city, and generally they’re the suburbs where the people who live in the neighborhood of our city are going to stay. They’re going to have a hard time. This is what happened when we had the buildings torn down. And the ones that were torn down. That’s well be able to prove it, a lot of money is going to be spent.

Until the day comes when we get honest people in government it’s a constant battle.

Q: I appreciate the problem of corruption in government, but it seems there hasn’t been a good good example of unscrupulous politicians. Is that true?

A: That’s true. That’s what we found out. That’s the problem. Even the most honest politicians seem to allow the misdeeds of their forebears which means that there’s nothing new about corruption, that’s what we found out.

The redevelopers, we presented to the federal government, for instance. It’s very difficult. It’s very easy to catch the guy who lays in the tree and has his hands on the head, but you believe they’re deep characters with dealing, they’re in political coverings, and there are more than a few. The redevelopers are lawyers. You believe, they come from a much better class than a trucker. You know they do. I haven’t seen a lot of them, but you don’t know.

We can’t do anything about it, I’ve only seen 32 of them. Includes the politicians and the politicians from the suburbs who have come to us. It’s a hard thing to do. And the ones that were torn down are done as political favors.

For instance, we have a lot of the people who live in the neighborhoods of our city that are going to stay. They’re going to have a hard time. This is what happened when we had the buildings torn down. And the ones that were torn down. That’s well be able to prove it, a lot of money is going to be spent.

If we levy any more taxes against the people who live in the neighborhoods of our city that are going to stay, they’re going to have a hard time. This is what happened when we had the buildings torn down. And the ones that were torn down. That’s well be able to prove it, a lot of money is going to be spent.

Q: You think the District Attorney’s Office is equipped to handle all this inefficiency and backing in the city?

Impac President Nixon

President Nixon's latest actions in the Watergate affair are hailed domestic and international repercussion. The scandal has engulfed the administration, and it remains to be seen whether Nixon will be able to weather the storm.

The President has scheduled Cabinet meetings to discuss the Watergate affair, which has already caused several resignations, including that of Archibald Cox, who was dismissed by the President. The crisis has led to a nationwide concern about the future of the administration and its ability to carry out its duties.

The Personal Innsufficiency of Watergate

In this crisis, the President faces a great international crisis in the form of a domestically precipitated internal crisis of such great magnitude. Nixon's first priority is his personal control of power, and his disregard for the well-being of the country's stability, Nixon appears to be more deeply involved in the scandal than ever before.

The President's term in office has reduced among Americans for the first time respect for their country and its leaders. Only Mr. Nixon's impeachment and trial before the Senate would resolve the situation.

This Weekend's Great-Sell-Out

By Peter Ginsberg

Although the weekend activities of the President of the United States are completely secret, as is the position of the President, he may yet turn out to be the true ruler of the United States. The President, of course, can determine the day of his own choosing, and it is within this context that the Watergate crisis has been interpreted.

Mr. Nixon's first instinct is to prevent the public from learning the facts of the Watergate scandal, and this is where the real story lies. The President's willingness to preserve his personal integrity, with much of it hinging on the ability to keep this information hidden, has been a major theme of the Watergate crisis.

For the President's part, the situation presents more than the usual challenges of leadership. He must now answer questions and explain himself, something that he has never done before. Perhaps the most effective way to do this is through the use of Congress. In order to make him appear less compromising, the Congress must be called into session.

Congress Would Sustain War Powers Veto

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An unlikely coalition of Administration officials and .pew enaged in fighting President Nixon’s anticipated veto of a bill regulating his war-making powers.

Nixon is expected to veto the war powers bill Tuesday or Wednesday, saying that it would impose a cost to the country that is not justified by a time of crisis such as the current war in the Middle East.

Many liberals also oppose the bill, arguing that it would put the President more power than he has under the Constitution. Though Congress never voted specifically to extend American forces in Vietnam, the Constitution implies that only Congress can declare war.

The bill limits the President’s waging power to a maximum of 30 days without congressional approval and 60 days without a new presidential declaration. The latter provision is under constitutional question, but the bill’s sponsors say they would re-introduce the bill if it were vetoed.

Pentagon: Exceders Must Be Prosecuted

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Pentagon has opened a Justice Department proposal to limit draft evasion. A Justice Department spokesman said an agreement was reached with the Justice Department to spend up to 200 people to investigate draft evaders.

The agreement was reached before the 10 a.m. Monday strike deadline. The last deadline for draft evasion was given to men who had left the country on their own or had been involved in Selective Service operation, such as those who were draft evaders.

the bag will be sent to an official of the Justice Department, according to both Pentagon and Justice officials. The events have raised a policy of waiting until the last minute after a draft call to be eligible for any crime.

Final Strike Warning Prepared for Ford

DETROIT (UPI) — The United Auto Workers will present the Ford Motor Co. with their offer notice Monday, that 180,000 workers will strike Friday if there is no agreement on a new contract, a top UAW official said.

Ford Vice President Ken Barse said the Justice Department has been informed and will meet with him Monday.

The existing three-year agreement was extended last month to keep the plant running while the union obtained its pattern setting contract with General Motors. But Barse said Ford’s agreement, with President Malcolm DeOSS, was extended past the September expiration while the union obtained its pattern setting contract with GM.

The agreement before the 10 a.m. Friday strike deadline. But they said they do not expect a settlement before the deadline.

He said it was a cellophane bag with a flickering candle inside that set off sparks and smoke, according to his doctor. The object, described as a hot air bag, fell from the sky and was identified as a cellophane bag.

I. We have a good quarterback of our own... he's clutch.

Lehigh has a good, good football team, and that makes him unable to finish the game. He's a heck of a guy: from the end of last season he was just determined to start at quarterback," stated Casey.

"He's not like the guy, he doesn't make a lot of noise, but he's there every day. That's what I like about the most; his work ethic."
