Dining Service Strike Imminent; Union Members to Protest Today

By STEVE STEKLO and STEVE KIDDLE

Dining Service Co. members unanimously voted Sunday to join College Hall and the Franklin Buildings in a sit-down strike to protest the University's recent contract offer and the loss of the Veterinary School's acrylic lounge.

The dispute centers on the installation of vending machines in the entrance of the College Hall.

VET
Barnard, Brown Plan to Increase Required Credits for Graduation

By MARC GOLDSTEIN

Barnard and Brown are exploring the academic requirements of students in their upperclassman years. Brown has already increased its requirements, and Barnard is considering a similar move.

At Barnard, the current four-year plan requires a minimum of 124 course credits for graduation. Barnard President Mary Ann X. O'Toole is considering a proposal that would increase the number of required course credits to 136.

"The current system is being examined constantly, and even off-campus programs like the Yale residence hall system are being re-evaluated," O'Toole said. "We want to ensure that our students are challenged to their full potential."

At Brown, the number of required course credits for graduation has remained relatively stable. However, recent changes in academic policy and the increase in student enrollment have prompted a re-examination of the required credit structure. Brown's Academic Council is currently reviewing the proposal and is expected to make a decision in the coming months.

"We are looking at ways to ensure that our students have a well-rounded education and are prepared for success in their future careers," said Brown's Academic Dean, Professor John Miller.

The proposed changes at both institutions are in response to increasing demands on students to complete a broader range of coursework and to satisfy various requirements, such as the modern language requirement.

"We believe that increasing the number of course credits will help our students develop a more comprehensive understanding of their major disciplines," said O'Toole.

The proposed changes are being met with mixed reactions from students. Some are concerned about the added workload, while others believe it is necessary to prepare them for a more competitive job market.

"I think it's a good idea to increase the number of course credits," said senior Sarah Brown. "It will help me manage my time more effectively and give me a better chance of succeeding in graduate school."

"I'm worried about the additional workload," said sophomore Alex Green. "I don't think it's fair to expect students to take on a heavier course load."

The changes are expected to be implemented starting with the 2023-2024 academic year. Students will be able to choose between the new requirements and the current system for their upperclassman years.

In other news, the two institutions are also considering changes to their academic calendars. Barnard and Brown are exploring the possibility of shortening the summer break and extending the academic year to 11 months.

"We believe that extending the academic year will allow students more time to engage in research and internships," said O'Toole.

The changes are still in the planning stages, and both institutions are gathering feedback from students, faculty, and alumni before making a final decision.

"We want to ensure that these changes are beneficial to our students and will prepare them for success in their future careers," said Miller. "We are committed to providing our students with the best possible educational experience."
