Class of 1978 SAT Scores Reveal Apparent Increase

By JERRY PFEIFFER

The quality of the University’s applicant pool for the class of 1978 has “apparently” improved over last year, a decline in the number of applications, of admissions from the University, and SAT scores. College board tests for applicants to the class have decreased sharply since last year. Several other factors are involved in every school except Harvard, with SAT scores decreasing sharply.

University’s average SAT scores for the applicant pool have dropped from 1,250 to 1,200. Generally, the SAT, which is the most common aptitude test, has increased sharply in recent years, but this year’s increase is only significant according to the fact that he held

Because the SAT scores for Harvard applicants dropped from 1,300 to 1,250, the SAT scores of applicants from the University fell from 1,250 to 1,200.

President Robert C. Byrd, chair of the admissions committee, said last week that the University does not expect to see any significant increase in the number of applications for the class of 1978. He said he did not expect to see any significant increase in the number of applications, because many students have already applied for admission.

family. Penn-Urb patients are afforded complete physical, mental and hospital care. The center also has a social worker and a psychiatrist to deal with family problems and it plans to provide complete dental coverage by next spring.

According to program health coordinator Dr. Charles Hertz, the center, which began operations last August 1, "is designed as a model for delivering comprehensive health care for a defined population."

Last month a University committee suggested that the present Student Health Service here might be taken over by a more comprehensive health plan not unlike the Penn-Urb center.

The center currently houses four separate departments in adult medicine, mental health, community dentistry and nursing. The University offers "a co-twinning" program which allows Penn-Urb patients to work with Penn students and will be closely tied to Penn-Urb.

The center will house a dental unit which will be housed at the Penn-Urb center and is scheduled to commence full operations by March 1, 1975.

In a drive to provide comprehensive care to its patients, Penn-Urb has also made arrangements to assist patients who need treatment beyond what the center can provide. It has already made arrangements with the University Hospital (HUP), Graduate Hospital and Children's Hospital to provide specialized treatment for patients requiring it.

The center is also, according to them, "already well under way" in developing an emergency service in three areas such as heart attack victims.

Similarly, Penn-Urb is creating a Department of Home-Care, staffed by nurses who will treat patients, particularly the elderly, in their own homes.

Finally, "the most embryonic program," Hertz claimed, will provide nursing maintenance Organizations which provide prepaid group health plans. It has already made arrangements with the University Hospital (HUP), and is now being reorganized into a Penn-Urb-like unit, claiming that it is "not adequately staffed." The center's heavy emphasis on preventive medicine, he noted, is important to both of us. It's not just the medical end users that are interested in those things as well. There's a very good reason for doing that.
Consciousness-Raising:

By Beckie Jamon

The Bryn Mawr Women’s Alliance, a group of students and faculty dedicated to the promotion of women’s awareness, held a press conference yesterday in Mayer Hall to open a discussion on the issue of women’s liberation. The group is planning to hold a series of discussions on women’s rights over the next few weeks.

During the press conference, the group expressed its desire to raise awareness among both faculty and students about the issues facing women today. They emphasized the importance of developing a sense of consciousness and activism among campus members.

"Both schools hopefully ultimately to raise women’s consciousness about themselves and to stimulate the potential of each woman. By structuring the group with a very lax law, they feel the group can be activated," said a spokesperson for the Alliance.

Anybody Can Do the Job.

By Robert B. Rubin

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has issued a new guideline that opens up the possibility of hiring women in jobs traditionally held by men. The guideline states that employers should be willing to consider women for positions that have been traditionally dominated by men.

"This guideline is intended to help employers understand their obligations to hire women and to ensure that women are given fair and equal opportunities," said a spokesperson for the EEOC.

The guideline applies to all employers with 15 or more employees and covers both full-time and part-time jobs. It applies to both sexes and to all positions, regardless of whether they are traditionally held by men or women.

The EEOC has received many complaints from women who have been denied job opportunities because of their gender. The new guideline is intended to prevent such discrimination.

The guideline encourages employers to use affirmative action strategies, such as setting aside positions for women, to achieve gender parity in their workforces. It also requires employers to document their efforts to recruit and hire women.

The new guideline is a significant step forward in the fight for gender equality. It provides women with a clear path to achieving equal opportunities in the workplace. Wharton students and faculty are encouraged to support this important initiative.

Quakers Travel to Big Apple, Ithaca In Search of Fifth Straight Ivy Title

By DAVID CHANDLER

The Penn quakers took northward this weekend in search of fifth straight Ivy League basketball title that will place them in the conference’s “haves” category rather than the “have-nots.” The Aztec Invitational, which Penn has won three times and finished second two other times since the tournament began in 1969, is the last chance to get the nation’s attention. The Aztec Invitational is an invite-only invitational, and the title is up for grabs on Saturday night.
