Quakers Beat Cornell, Columbia to Capture Fifth Straight Ivy Title

BY DAVE CHANDLER

From The Daily Pennsylvania Student

TRENTON, N.J.—I expected it to be a day in which we would find five stories. I knew I wouldn't have to tell all five stories. I knew that five stories, not to mention the first round of the NCAA playoffs, next week in St. John's Alumni Hall in Philadelphia, were not going to be enough to give the campus a chance to breathe.

The Cornell University debating team out-classed Boston University Saturday in St. John's Alumni Hall in Philadelphia. The Quakers jumped out to a 14-2 lead in the first round of the NCAA playoffs, next weekend in St. John's Alumni Hall in Philadelphia. The Cornell team out-classed Boston University throughout the country.

Van Pelt Library Adds Computer File System
BY ANNETTE LEVINSON
A computer literature searching service is now offered by Van Pelt Library for graduate students who subscribe to the service. The service provides lists of titles, authors, references, and other data on the latest research in any given field, including astronomy, electronics, geography, science, business, agriculture, physics, and manufacturing. The librarian requests a list of citations from the computer relevant to the researcher's subject. Although some data bases are programmed to provide only bibliographical citations, others also provide abstracts of the references cited, to be read. The entire process takes only 1 to 3 minutes, he said, the reading time depending on the amount of material desired.

The search is usually less than five days, he said, and most users would not need to return to the library later for additional searches.

The cost of the service is $100 per week, he said.

The location of the service is the Design Building, 7th and Broad St., Philadelphia, Pa. 19122.

I sent a telegram to make public my concern about the University's recent disruption of order at Daniel F. Luger's lecture. The response was instant and violent, and the university's policies were unwavering.

At a Loss

Some Several Modest Proposals

By Mark Mancini

It is not difficult to understand the very real anxiety that the natural disaster has left in the hearts of many. At the time of the disaster, the university expressed deep concern and offered assistance to the community. This concern continues today, as the university works to support those affected and to prevent future incidents.

These days, needless to say, are more difficult. What starts out as a good day can easily turn into a complete disaster. The university's policies are unwavering, and it is difficult to know what to do or who to turn to for help.

There are those who say that the university is doing everything it can. They believe that the university is taking the necessary steps to prevent future incidents and to support those affected. Others, however, believe that the university is not doing enough. They believe that the university should be doing more to support those affected and to prevent future incidents.

In the wake of the disaster, the university has taken a number of steps to support those affected. These steps include providing financial assistance, offering counseling services, and working with community organizations to provide additional support.

While these steps are important, many believe that the university should be doing more. They believe that the university should be taking a more active role in preventing future incidents. They believe that the university should be working more closely with community organizations to provide additional support.

The university has taken some steps to address these concerns. For example, the university has established a task force to review its policies and procedures. The task force is working to identify areas where improvements can be made and to develop recommendations for action.

These steps are a positive start, but many believe that the university should be doing more. They believe that the university should be taking a more active role in preventing future incidents. They believe that the university should be working more closely with community organizations to provide additional support.

In the end, this is a difficult time for everyone. The university is working hard to support those affected and to prevent future incidents. We all need to work together to support those affected and to prevent future incidents.

PENN CHOKER Is Exemplifying Nativist

In reference to Bruce Banfield’s report in the Feb. 24, 1974, issue of The Daily Pennsylvanian, which described the activities of a group called “PENN CHOKER,” I would like to present a counterpoint to the article.

The Penn Choker does not present any real threat to the University community. In fact, I believe that its activities are beneficial to the University.

First of all, there are peanuts, a very nutritious and delicious food. They are a good source of protein and can be eaten raw or roasted. They are also a good source of fiber and can help with digestion.

Secondly, there are ladybugs, which are beneficial to the environment. They eat pests that can damage plants, and they can help keep the pest population in check.

Finally, there are owls, which are beneficial to the environment. They eat pests that can damage plants, and they can help keep the pest population in check.

In conclusion, I believe that the activities of the Penn Choker are beneficial to the University and to the environment. I urge the administration to support the Penn Choker and to encourage its activities.

This new residential learning program, located on the third floor of the Clas. of 1899 Building (Law-Fire Hall), will seek to provide an environment where participating students can develop basic German language skills and fluency. NEW YORK—The last is always the hardest. There is no one left to please, there is nothing to lose. It is the chance to prove you can bear the brunt of a game on your own. It is a chance to shatter every belief of your opponents. It is a chance to shatter your own, but not to adverse, but normally, fast. Fines continued. As he was speaking, the New York Times critic, who had been there last week, was sitting at the other end of the table with his head down, his hands on his knees, and his eyes closed. Squashmen, Cagers Win Titles over Weekend

Racketeuse Use Depth To Take Intercollegiates

By GUENTHERANN

"If you hadn't won today, you might have won tomorrow," said Fred Cofer after the squash match between Penn and Princeton last Friday. "Our style of play is simply more depth." The 3-2 win over Princeton gave Penn the Ivy League championship.

Although March isn't far enough to bat a tennis ball, the squash match at the Princeton Bowl will be remembered as one of the best ever played in the Ivy League. Each match was close, with each player putting up a good fight.

Quaker captain Joe Stein led the team to victory. He defeated Princeton captain David Cofer in the final match, 14-12, 11-9, 9-7. Stein was one of the few players to win all three matches.

The Quakers took the match 3-2, with Stein's win being the deciding factor. The match was close throughout, with each player putting up a good fight. The Quakers' victory was a testament to their depth and skill.

The University of Pennsylvania's Squash team won the far end of the squash court, dominating both ends of the court. They were able to control the match from start to finish, winning all three matches.

The Quakers' victory was a testament to their depth and skill. Each player put up a good fight, and the team worked together to achieve the win.

Quaker Mermaids Fail To Score In Eastens

The Penn women's squash team lost the Eastens this past weekend, falling 3-2 to the University of Pennsylvania. The match was close, with each team winning one of the first two games.

The Quakers' first match was against the University of Pennsylvania, which they won 3-0. The second match was against the University of Delaware, which they lost 2-1. The final match was against the University of Kentucky, which the Quakers won 3-2.

Overall, the team performed well, but were unable to score in the Eastens. The team's depth and skill were on display throughout the matches, but they were unable to secure a victory in the Eastens.

The Penn women's squash team will continue to work hard and improve their skills in preparation for the next tournament. They will be looking to give a better performance in the next match to bring home the Eastens title.
