250 Students Left Without Housing In Opening Random Room Lottery

By JOHN MURPHY

Approximately 250 undergraduate students did not receive room assignments in last week's first round of Housing Lottery.

Edwin Ledwell, assistant director of Housing, announced Tuesday that there were 356 applicants who had applied for the remaining 86 rooms in High Rise North.

Because the number of applicants was higher than anticipated, Ledwell said that the lottery process had to be expanded.

He added that all students who had applied for housing in High Rise North would receive room assignments.

Ledwell said that the University has never had a room lottery for its students.

Letters to the Editor

Reviewing the New Sociology Department Major Requirements

I am writing this letter in regard to the recent decision of the Undergraduate Committee to deepen Sociology as a major at the University.

As far back as the 1950s, the Sociology Department had been investigating the possibility of creating a more comprehensive major program. However, the decision was not made until recently, due to various external factors.

The new requirements for the Sociology major are designed to provide students with a more rigorous and comprehensive education. The program aims to prepare students for careers in academia, research, and policy-making.

The new requirements include a significant increase in the number of required courses, with a focus on advanced-level classes. Students will be required to complete a thesis or a capstone project, which will be supervised by a faculty member.

I believe that these changes are necessary to keep the Sociology Department at the forefront of the field. The new requirements will allow students to gain a deeper understanding of social phenomena and develop the skills necessary for success in a variety of careers.

I urge all students to carefully review the new requirements and to contact their advisors if they have any questions.

Sincerely,

Barker Combines Desire and Ability

In my experience at Penn, I have had the opportunity to observe my professor, Barker, in action in and out of the classroom. Barker is a true example of the ideal teacher, combining desire and ability.

Barker's desire to teach is evident in his dedication to the subject matter. He is passionate about sociology and is always eager to share his knowledge with his students. His ability to communicate complex ideas is remarkable, as he has a unique ability to simplify difficult concepts.

In the classroom, Barker is known for his engaging teaching style and his ability to connect with students. He creates a comfortable and interactive learning environment, which encourages active participation and critical thinking.

Barker's desire to teach is also evident in his commitment to his research and scholarship. He is a prolific writer and has published numerous articles and books on sociology.

I am grateful for the opportunity to have Barker as my professor, and I am confident that many other students will also benefit from his teaching and mentoring.

Sincerely,

list of schools to which he wants to apply. The service usually results in more applications because it saves the applicant time and money, she explained. Two hundred thirty-seven students were sent acceptances and 156 have so far indicated they will enroll in the School, she explained.

The number of medical school applicants increased 200 over last year's 4000, continuing an upward trend in applications, Gantz said. She attributed the rise to "population increase" and decreased job opportunities in other fields.

"I guess medicine is always getting more popular," she added.

Gantz said that of the 406 students who applied to the Medical School, 218 were admitted and 170 have accepted the offer of admission.

The target of the admissions office has been to enroll 160 students every year since 1971. However, Gantz said that the office expects that about ten of the students who accepted admissions will eventually decide not to attend this fall.

The number of applications to the Law School dropped from 2900 to 2700 this year, Miller said. Applications fell by 200 last year also. Miller attributed the decline to the establishment of an earlier application deadline this year.

"The number of applicants would have been closer to last year or more if our closing date was the same," he asserted.

One hundred thirty-eight students have indicated they will enroll in the Law School, with most of the acceptances already mailed, according to Miller. The target number is 200 enrolled students, he added.

As the approval came before the appointment of the states' associate or the undergraduate chairman, he said, the approval was arbitrary. "It's not fair using this system because the faculty and student representatives are not involved in the decision," he said. "I don't think we want to be involved in all the detail before the fact before the final decision is made.

This also gives the student an opportunity to evaluate his performance more objectively."

Thus, the approval of the new procedures is a matter of the old regulations requiring three courses within six years. The new regulations require three courses within three years.

"We hope the new requirements will give students a chance to become involved in a more dynamic way with the major," Thrall said.

The new requirements were drafted in March of 1972 by the departmental curriculum committee which included both faculty and students. The regulations were approved March 15 by the department and applied to all students accepted into the major after that date. The regulations are open to discussion at any time with the department.

Nineteen students from Harvard and Radcliffe scoured Europe, Israel, Turkey, Morocco and the U.S.S.R. where they made careful notes on all the places where students can find work, and places where students want to have to find work and are a great guide for students looking for work and places.

Lightweight Preview

Lightweights Look for Title Lining

By PETER BURGESS

As the spring break ended and the weather turned to the usual rains and showers, hardly anyone could have guessed that the Penn lightweight crew had turned the season just around the corner. The men's team, now heavier and stronger, the women's team, now lighter and more experienced, were all ready for the season's opening meet.

The lightweight crew, with coach Michael Fields at the helm, has been preparing for this season for a long time. The team has been training since the fall, and the men have been preparing for the meet all season long.

The season opened with the annual meeting of the National Lightweight Championships at the National Rowing Center in Worcester, Mass. The team performed well, finishing in the top ten in both the men's and women's categories.

The team has been working hard on their conditioning and technique, and are ready to take on the challenges of the upcoming season. With a strong team and a talented coach, the lightweight crew is poised for success.

Divers Cragg, Knipe: Dynamic Duo

Photos and Text by ERIC CHESON

Rob Cragg and Bruce Knipe are two of the best divers in the country. They are the current National Champions in the 1-meter and 3-meter diving competitions.

The 1-meter competition was held at the NCAA Championships, where Cragg and Knipe both performed exceptionally well. Cragg won the 1-meter event with a score of 420.50, while Knipe finished second with a score of 409.70. In the 3-meter competition, Cragg and Knipe again performed well, with Cragg coming in second with a score of 445.20 and Knipe finishing fifth with a score of 403.30.

The national championships were held at the University of California, Berkeley, and were attended by some of the best divers in the country. Cragg and Knipe's performance at the championships cemented their status as some of the best divers in the country.

Frost-Fetti

By RICHARD FEINGOLD

Camden County High School has a fine baseball program, which has led to many an opportunity for its players. The team is led by coach John Fennell, who has been with the program for over 20 years.

The team's success this year can be attributed to the hard work and dedication of the players. They have been working hard all season, and their efforts are paying off.

The team is currently ranked third in the state, and is hoping to finish out the season strong. With a few more wins, they could make it to the playoffs and have a chance at the state championship.

Wecal Leads Golfers Past 71

The Penn golfers didn't start their season off on the best of terms. They finished in 11th place at the Ithaca Invitational, with a team score of 311. The team was led by Wecal, who finished in second place with a score of 70.

Wecal, a senior, has been a consistent performer for the Penn golf team. He has finished in the top 10 in several tournaments this season, including the Ithaca Invitational and the Colonial National Championship.

The team is looking to improve its performance in the upcoming tournaments. With Wecal leading the way, the Penn golf team is hopeful of finishing in the top 10 at the upcoming tournaments.
