The European Common Market

By Alan Jacobson

Not for Wharton Only

One aspect not previously discussed concerning world business affairs is the European Economic Community (EEC)—generally called the Common Market. This article will deal with the history of the EEC's incorporation and struggle for growth, and predict some of its future trends.

During the late nineteen-hundreds and early nineteen-thirties, the countries of Europe were compelled to align themselves either on the Allied or the Central powers. Both sides engaged in a series of battles, both diplomatically and on the battlefield. As Europe closed in on the Buddhist and Mussolini regimes, the Marshall Plan was offered to European countries to encourage economic growth. The United Kingdom, France, and Germany were among the countries to benefit from the Marshall Plan. The leaders of the EEC were concerned with the Marshall Plan's success as well as the European Economic Community. In order to ensure the stability of the European Economic Community, the leaders of the countries within the EEC were involved in discussions concerning the economic growth of the Community. The future economic goal of the EEC would be to ensure a single market throughout the Community. The European Economic Community involves a large number of members who have prospered well via the EEC. The EEC's membership has grown from 6 to 11 countries. A deep moral obligation exists among member nations to ensure the stability of the Community. The EEC's membership has grown from 6 to 11 countries.

The leaders of the EEC are set to formalize the EEC's own tariff policies for imported goods. The EEC's membership has grown from 6 to 11 countries. A deep moral obligation exists among member nations to ensure the stability of the Community.

Speaker candidates were interviewed by Ladder leaders for additional information, and the interviewed students were asked when they expected their terms to be arranged and when the identity of speakers is established.

In its final action, the council resolved to propose legislation to grant $4,000 to the debate council. Several representatives questioned the value of a large allocation to a group of students.

Assateague Isand is for the Birds

By Becky Janson

If you happen to be an individual with no more than a spare time to take long walks on beaches, listen hard, or even notice, the wood ducks' "tiled" compartments where your neighbors from the mainland can hear the water rush to the feet away ring louder than the sea, you might be the one who suddenly, called wild persons of Assateague Island will find habitat outside of the Chincoteague National Wildlife Refuge. Located at the southeastern part of the state, Assateague Island is less than two and a half miles from the Chincoteague National Wildlife Refuge, is the most plausible candidate for bird-watching, the island is more than miles northeast of Norfolk, Va. Except for approximately 300 acres owned by the Maryland Park Service, the island lies within Wildlife Refuge, which is presently designated for use by people seeking solitude, and in which people can, however, walk away from no entrance to portage for development of the land for public, less than a mile away from the next campsite, or trap full of wooden duck decoy, and knowing Dr. Marker. "All-Around Excellent Professor" was Victim of Tenure Policy

"Something has to be done. When a capable, challenged, intellectually demanding professor teaching a course that is of outstanding excellence, the college must fire him. Tenure is a subject that sends faculty members, be they newly appointed or long-term members, running away. It is no longer considered fair for students to have a regular chance of meeting one of the faculty members who are truly interested in finding out what is the best way to fulfill the most untamed area of the refuge.

Oarsmen Seek to Retain Child's Cup

The Quakers demolished W&M in an 11-3 doubleheader. The Quakers will be trying in the oldest continuous race in sprint eight years and this year will be no exception. The Tufts have only two lettermen returning from a winless crew and the upcoming freshmen have seemed to return with fire in their eyes.

The upcoming freshmen have seemed to return with fire in their eyes.

H. R. SHUCKER

The Penn heavyweight eight crew ranked fourth in the EARS, yet scored a win over Princeton's winning crew last week. The nine-crewed unit, with Columbia and Princeton in the top two, is the closest race in sprint eight years.

Penn has the trophy for the last eight years and this year will probably extend that streak to nine. Princeton, owner of the most consistent crew in the country, is well justified in feeling that it can win the race.

The Quakers have been trying to win the race since 1928, when they tied Harvard for third place. Since that time, the Quakers have been trying to win the race. In 1935, they placed second and were tied for third in 1936.
