Federally-Funded Team Designs New Programs in English, Health

By LU ANNE TRACY

A group of English and health educators and administrators are currently designing new programs as part of federally-funded, two-year projects under a comprehensive study and management of instruction. The project is financed by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and is designed to develop programs of study which will encourage students to take courses outside of their major field of study or to be taught by instructors from outside the institution.

The motion was submitted by Statistics Professor Ezra Krendel in support of the Wharton CTS committee review committee. The Wharton CTS committee was created to improve the quality of the program and to encourage students to take courses outside of their major field of study or to be taught by instructors from outside the institution.

The motion was passed unanimously in the presence of the president. Student representatives were elected by the students to serve on the committee. The package will consist of courses, a reduction in fees, and the option to have their courses taught by instructors from outside the institution.

If passed, the program would be the first of its kind in the United States. It is hoped that the program will encourage students to take courses outside of their major field of study or to be taught by instructors from outside the institution.
Administrators Warn of New Access Law possible acts are that may be ad-stituted and what we should do about it," but claimed it is "hard to decide when we should make University policy." Last year, he recalled, university officials considered whether to make them to eliminate possible effects of the legislation.

However, he predicted the legal questions surrounding the bill "would not be answered straight away." Administration Vice President Bill Brown said Tuesday the new law would

"strictly the selection process" and make "assessment of non-academic factors much more difficult" with confidential recommendations and staff evaluations of applicants might be "exposed to public scrutiny." "We might have to rely more on standardized tests and high school transcripts, which would be an unfortunate direction to be moving in," he said.

Brief explained the admissions office currently builds academic recommendations, outside recommendations required by the applicant, and written reports, candidate interviews, an alumni rating sheet, and other factors in their decision on a "reader rating card."

Brief said there would be "same-differing of matter" by high school counselors and admissions staff.

members if records were open to the public.

If the Buckley law applies to current student seeking access to past records, Brief said it would "get attribution in the position of breaching understandings of confidentiality."

"The idea of a Student Health Board is not a problem," he claimed.

"We would have to be much more ca-tious and avoid overstatement in their written reports to avoid unnecessarily alarming parents."

He warned "psychiatric records would be a problem," because

"patient's diagnosis might go out告诉大家 their problems.

As a result, he claimed, parents would be "less willing to reach their reports in very general form," and students are currently allowed to see their medical records, "as long as they are intended to treat the record beforehand."

Associate Director of University

Placement Martin Stamm said

Tuesday the law may have a "negative" effect on job recommendations because "students are perceived to have more credibility when their records are not open."

Although placement records are generally "not detrimental" to the job candidacy, Stamm said past "legal suitability of confidentiality" might be jeopardized if the Buckley law applies to records closed before it takes effect.

"Other placement offices around the country have proposed destroying records or obtaining written statements from the candidates saying they're able by the confidentiality," Stamm said.

"We're students are already allowed to examine financial and records with the help of giving permission on the forms," Koval said, "and the office has the right to charge the way we've been handling the operating in most cases.

"Records are not open to 100 to 150 of the nearly 3000 aided students lack outpatient permission to inspect and records."

In Protection of Rights

The following legislation, formally titled "The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974," was signed into law on August 29, 1974. It affects college and university students, as well as parents. It guarantees the right to access their own educational records and the right to challenge the accuracy or completeness of those records. It also guarantees the protection of certain educational data from unlawful disclosure.

Guiding Academic Direction

According to the Act, students have the right to be informed about the policies and practices of their educational institutions. They have the right to inspect and review their educational records. They also have the right to challenge the accuracy or completeness of those records. The Act also provides that students have the right to be informed of the policies and procedures of their educational institutions regarding the protection of their educational records.

WASHINGTON (UPI) - A defense lawyer posted a $100,000 bond for former aide to President Richard M. Nixon who has been charged with a

John D. Ehrlichman, his No. 2 White House aide, throughout the Watergate cover-up "to save his own neck."

"In simple terms, Mr. Ehrlichman had been had by his boss, the president of the United States," said William J. Brennan, Ehrlichman's lawyer, during a hearing opening statement to the 32 judges in the watergate cover-up trial.

In another Watergate development, G. Gordon Liddy, former member of the original Watergate break-in team, was released from jail on a sharply reduced $45,000 bond Tuesday after his attorneys promised a Federal Judge he would not flee the country.

Liddy, sporting a neat salt-and-pepper beard grown during nearly 21 months in federal prison and the black line of a California jail, was set free to manage after U.S. District Judge Henry J. Blackman slashed the appeal bond from $80,000.

Mansfield Calls for Anti-Inflation Action

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Sen. Mike Mansfield, responding for Democrats to President Ford's anti-inflation program, said Tuesday the government has not fulfilled the nation's economic emergency and seems to "belch the capacity to do so."

"In simple terms, Mr. Ehrlichman had been had by his boss, the president of the United States," said William J. Brennan, Ehrlichman's lawyer, during a hearing opening statement to the 32 judges in the watergate cover-up trial.
