Congress, State Seats at Stake in Election

Democrats Look to Sweep Congressional, State Races

By United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Fighting inflation, high unemployment, voter apathy, and a WatergateSilk, beleaguered Republican Monday headed for the election hoping that a last moment shift will hold their losses to a minimum Tuesday. But all polls and predictions by party leaders indicated that Democrats were on the verge of a sweep that would continue their generation-long domination of Congress and increase, perhaps dramatically, their control over the nation's major cornerstone.

In an election-year smear, President Ford had his tough portion through in behalf of Republican candidates and pleaded with Americans to vote.

At the same time, Senate Democratic Leader J. W. Bhodes urged the voters to purge conservative Democrats in a last-ditch effort.

For incumbent Gov. George C. Wallace the only question is to be answered in Tuesday's balloting was whether he will be able to become a three-term governor in the state's history. Victory is crucial. One key to seats that may be up for grabs Monday are the Senate and House GOP

Justices for the United States Senate wound up their campaign Monday by showing off the styles they have exhibited throughout the last 12 months.

Senator Richard Senweiker spent the day Monday criss-crossing the state from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, then was out of touch for most of the day. Sources in Flaherty's campaign office said late Monday they thought the candidate had spent most of the day door-knocking. Flaherty, who must come out vastly outnumbering the substantive consequences on morale that another period of prolonged and distant silence would have on the national economy and stock market. Yet, the gamble appeared to pay off.

ELECTION '74

Gloomy GOP Outlook in Locks in City, State

By PETER GINSBERG

Only four will tell the actual effects of Watergate and the economic crisis at American politics, but, by the voting tomorrow, it will be evident that these issues have been permanently hot.

The Republican Party is in last place in polls, and a Democratic sweep could finish off the party. Throughout the state, labor's unalterable commitment with the Democrats will not make the difference.

The poll numbers are not terribly reliable, but if the predictions are correct, it is clear that neither the Republicans nor the Democrats will capture the majority. The choice is a bitter one for both parties.

Pennsylvaniaans are presented with a choice between two candidates: Republican Senator Richard Schweiker and Democratic Governor Michael J. Dukakis, who are generally considered to be the most liberal candidates in the state. Schweiker, a moderate Republican, has been running a strong campaign, while Dukakis, a liberal Democrat, has been gaining support in the polls.

The election is expected to be decided by the vote of the swing voters, who are likely to be influenced by the outcome of other races. The outcome of the Senate race is also expected to be close, with incumbent Senator George McGovern facing a strong challenge from Republican Fred Harris.

On Tuesday, November 5, 1974, the traditionally Democratic working-class voters will carry the region despite a slight lead in the Philadelphia suburbs. This is expected to be the final outcome.

Pittsburgh while Schweiker is gaining in the suburbs. The polls still show the Senator trailing in the suburbs, but he is expected to win by a narrow margin.

In the race for Governor, incumbent Democrat Ed Rendell is expected to win comfortably, with Republican Mike Fisher trailing by a wide margin.

Senatorial Message to Pennsylvania Voters

By Election Day we want all Pennsylvania voters to throw off the cloak of apathy, come out to the polls and vote their conscience.

The rejection of your right to vote is a symbolic rejection of the principles upon which this great democracy was founded.

While I am aware that there is widespread apathy throughout the country, I have faith that Penn- sylvania will rise above this, that she will campaign and win.

I hope you will show your pride in the American system of government by your presence at the polls.

Plan First, Shop Later for Economy's Sake

Apart from rent, the largest cost for any student is the food bill. University Dining Service became increasingly expensive and their options limited. And little patience can prevent the last minute from quickly becoming the maximum state grant available this spring. Student grants from $18,000 to $20,000 may still be India, in the summer Germany, next Fall China or India. The student who wants to know more about a society and culture he is visiting usually fits into this category. The comparative experience is the key. A CTOP (Comparative Studies) course is now exploring the multicultural societies. Each unit will offer the best deal available to you, usually order in advance and work 4 hours a week. Even with the exceptions of Pen and Psychology, the particular world area studies are the courses available in the Spring unit on India: Sociology of South Asia.

The University introduces a new program for the student who has completed the first year. Theling of the new century demands an educated citizen who has both empathy with knowledge. The student who wants to know more about a society than a single course can give him. He wants full specialist training, who wants to find common and position on the international scene. Each unit will have its own computer access, in order to add stunning educational value will be a program unmatched at any other university. Undergraduates will jump over the usual graduate student buffer zone in which only graduate students have been privileged to work on the research interests of the faculty. For a selected number of students, the University will offer a continuing comparative seminar for the first time catering to students who know just one other specialty other than their own but two, and linked by staffing and curriculum content into a faculty research center. It is now exploring the ways in which multicultural societies deal with their problems of growth and conflict. Some twenty faculty members from a wide variety of disciplines have already agreed to participate in this seminar. Looking at the interests of this seminar, the different course units will be threaded throughout the fall which is truly distinctive, cumulative, comparative experience.

Below are the courses available in the Spring unit on India:

South Asia Regional Studies

South Asia 402. Modern South Asia: An Introductory Survey. l.cu. Hinton, Kesling, and Pearson. T Th 9:30-10:30. 101 Williams Hall. Social, political and economic life of India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, and neighboring countries.

South Asia 404. Classics of South Asia 1 cu. Weiler W 2-4 154 Williams Hall. Reading and discussion of traditional literary, religious, philosophical, and historical classics in translation.

South Asia 435. Sociology of South Asia 1 cu. Lamberth W 2-4. 202 Williams Hall. An analysis of national and sub-cultural values and attitudes, the formation of personality, and the basic units of society. Ecological studies and the impact on the traditional social structure of such topics as urbanization, industrialization, economic development, and modernization.

The script has been thrown away for the Ivy League soccer season. The members of the Ancient Eight have been so inconsistent that it has become impossible to predict who will finish up on top, or even first, of the standings in the final league championship of the season.

For instance, Harvard, Penn, Princeton, and Penn State will all take part in the Ivy League tournament on Saturday. The field will again include the Ivy League's five two-division winners, plus five other teams who have battled each other for place in the league.

In the Ivy League, Harvard holds the top seed as they win the league last year, and for the fourth time this season.

The Harvard team is led by a powerful defense, which has registered two league shutouts for the season. The Crimson has been on the short end of the script.

As for the Quakers: this season will be a season of improvement. The team has shown great promise and has been able to keep the ball on the field longer than any other Ivy League team.
