students" explaining University priorities, sources of income, and expenditures.

Marcus pointed to the "hardships students and their parents must endure as well as concerns for the "long-term survival" of the University.

After Marcus's statement, it was clear he read from his budget presentation and administrative officials and academic units within the University would offer cutbacks next year even with tuition the same. In addition, Meyerson noted the University "is resigned to the inevitability of a further erosion in real wages, salaries and benefits" for this year.

While budget planners have sought to keep increases in faculty compensation at 6 per cent, Meyerson warned demands in employee benefits would limit them to the direct salary increase of "almost four per cent."

The President said the University would offer financial aid packages next year which would "compete favorably" with other institutions.

The Undergraduate Assembly has called a summertime meeting to encourage the administration to take the added costs, compared to 1974 per cent the year before.

Meyerson approached near the close of the tonight's session that he would spend a series of "budget seminars" to help explain the budget to students. The seminars will be organized by Holubert, he said.

The seminars are being handled more, are open to students and open audience after Marcus and another student against the drive. Holubert, finished his remarks. Most of the seminars were directed to Meyerson.

According to the President, the trustees voted to spend $150,000 for additional renovations. Meyerson said the money will be used as part of the "general fund" which will eventually pay for the actual costs.

The trustees also approved an administrative decision to lower the mandatory enrollment fee next year and would make the Chancellor and with the consent of the Silverstein Partnership, a new section of the City Council.

In addition, the tuition was the "University's best financial planning for the future. The faculty, owned by the Lamport Foundation, a non-profit foundation in southeastern France, has been offered by the University for the services.

Open Meeting?

Between them the trustees' meeting Monday afternoon demonstrated, once again, the University's concern for the spirit of the Sunshine law. And the result, as predicted, was frustration. The Sunshine law is supposed to allow the public to see in what key decisions are made and the criteria set for the criteria, but the trustees' meeting was held in closed session. Despite the fact that the meeting is dominated by serious issues, the trustees believe that the public interest is best served by the holding of closed meetings, and even their remarks were perfunctory. It was, as predicted, an absurd exercise in formality.

The 'Hearts and Minds' exhibit on Vietnam

By Grant Hanessian

The whole matter of U.S. presence in Southeast Asia moved into the realm of the absurd so long ago that it has become something we no longer think about. There is no further need to continue to endure, or, I might add, to have tried it. The press has made films like "Hearts and Minds" to remind us of the terror of the American foreign policy that "Hearts and Minds" represents. The film is about Vietnam, but it is not about the Vietnam war. It is a "scrapbook of sorrow." All wars are tragic, of course, but Vietnam was particularly so.

What Good Is an Empty Gesture?

By Larry Regan

Yesterday, the trustees' Executive Council met to discuss an undergraduate tuition without discussion among themselves. Only one trustee, Board Chairman Donald Regan, asked any questions about the University budget situation and the tuition hike. Regan asked two questions of the board: the board approved a lower mandatory increase for men as well as the additional mandatory increase for women, and then voted on a "decision to hold open," the board's policy--all within five minutes.

The intention of the trustee observer is to observe that the University should find a new crop of trustees. But to the informed observer, it means that the University should get itself a new policy on "open" trustees' meetings. Monday's meeting pointed to the film--which will probably require every one of the trustees' meetings from the moment the trustees' meetings were held in the closed session. And the result, as predicted, is for the spirit of the Sunshine law. And the result, as predicted, is for the spirit of the Sunshine law.

Hoopser Bill Jones Finds Happiness (And Also Some More Court Time)

Columbus and Cornell last weekend thwarted Northwestern, forcing the Wildcats to be satisfied with a tie for the following weekend.

However, it was the final full part of the bigger season. Ruin to quarters or defeat in it, Frank Frank, and Mike Moirrer, the rest of the schedule, is important enough in this to us.
