Medical School Receives Funds For Construction

By EDWARD ANGELO

A $5.3 million grant from the Hillman Foundation will help fund the construction of a new Medical Education Building behind the Levitan Building.

The building, which will contain classrooms, laboratories and offices for teaching and research, will give the school enough facilities to accommodate the expansion. The $5.3 million is in addition to the $2.5 million already budgeted for the project.

"The move will not only alleviate overcrowding, but will also create new laboratories for research," said George F. Stemmler, Associate Dean of Undergraduate Medical Education.

Stemmler said the Medical School had been working for three years to secure the current national rate for construction in the health care field. The new building will provide additional space for primary care education.

A $175,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare will also help finance the new building.

"The opening of the new building will help us prepare for the patients of the future," Stemmler said.

The Medical School currently has 312 attending physicians, Stemmler said. By the year 2000, the number of attending physicians is expected to increase to 500.

"We are not going to be able to train the physicians we will need if we don't build new facilities," Stemmler said.

The funds were approved by the Hillman Foundation which provides grants for primary care and primary care education.

"The grant is a reflection of the Foundation's commitment to education," Stemmler said.

Stemmler also said that the Hillman Foundation's grant will be "a big step in the right direction." The Medical School is still in the process of planning the new facility.

"We have been working for years to get this grant," Stemmler said.

"This is a good start, but we still have a long way to go," Stemmler said. "We are going to need a lot more money to complete the project."

Ford Seeks Coalition

NEW YORK (UPI) - President Ford, calling for a "coalition of the willing," said Thursday that he would consider joining other countries in a military strike on Turkey to try to oust the Greek Cypriots from the island of Cyprus.

The president said that he would consider joining the Japanese, French and British forces as well as a joint American-Canadian force in any attack on the Greek Cypriots.

Ford's statement came as he prepared to leave for the Middle East, where he will meet with leaders from the region to discuss the Cyprus issue.

The president said that he would consider joining the Japanese, French and British forces as well as a joint American-Canadian force in any attack on the Greek Cypriots.

On ‘Helping’ South Vietnam: Honest Intervention?

By Edward S. Herman

In such periods of intense discussion it is often tempting to invent a binary opposition between ‘us’ and ‘them’, and in doing so to present the situation in terms of a unilinear progression from the present to the future, from the primitive to the modern, from the alien to the familiar, from the inexact to the precise. This is the kind of thinking that leads to the conclusion that ‘we’ need to help South Vietnam because the people there are not doing things properly, and ‘we’ therefore have to impose upon them the system of political, economic, and military control that ‘we’ have developed in our own country. The result is a reinforcement of the idea that ‘we’ are superior because ‘we’ have a system that is supposed to be better than ‘theirs’. This is a dangerous kind of thinking because it can lead to the imposition of violence on the people of South Vietnam, who are not in fact necessarily inferior to us.

The first step in understanding the situation is to recognize that the political, economic, and military control that ‘we’ have developed in our own country is not necessarily better than what exists in South Vietnam. The people of South Vietnam have developed their own system of control, which is not necessarily inferior to ours. The problem is not that ‘we’ need to help South Vietnam, but that ‘we’ need to help ourselves understand the situation.

The second step is to recognize that the people of South Vietnam are not necessarily inferior to ‘us’. They are not necessarily inferior in intelligence, education, or economic resources. They are not necessarily inferior in their ability to cope with the problems that they face. The problem is not that ‘we’ need to help South Vietnam, but that ‘we’ need to help ourselves understand the situation.

The third step is to recognize that the people of South Vietnam are not necessarily inferior in their ability to make decisions that are in their own interests. They are not necessarily inferior in their ability to make decisions that are in the interests of their country. The problem is not that ‘we’ need to help South Vietnam, but that ‘we’ need to help ourselves understand the situation.

The fourth step is to recognize that the people of South Vietnam are not necessarily inferior in their ability to make decisions that are in the interests of their country and in the interests of ‘us’. They are not necessarily inferior in their ability to make decisions that are in the interests of both their country and ‘us’. The problem is not that ‘we’ need to help South Vietnam, but that ‘we’ need to help ourselves understand the situation.

The fifth step is to recognize that the people of South Vietnam are not necessarily inferior in their ability to make decisions that are in the interests of their country, in the interests of ‘us’, and in the interests of the rest of the world. They are not necessarily inferior in their ability to make decisions that are in the interests of their country, in the interests of ‘us’, and in the interests of the rest of the world.

The problem is not that ‘we’ need to help South Vietnam, but that ‘we’ need to help ourselves understand the situation.

I'm off." Then Ixiri not only didn't listen to her, "Who are already on to a good thing. You leave when you want to. Travel comfortably. Arrive refreshed and on time."

Waterston was also questioned about his experiences in last year's television production of the film "Great Gatsby," starring Katherine Hepburn, and he said that he had good fun, but that he "said the novel more the Great Gatsby." He also maintained it is "wonderfully made" by the critics, Waterston related, noting that "the director, Jack Clayton, the novel . . . the film. He's made it dumb, it's made good films. He may have been misled, but he wasn't aimless," the actor summarized.

DEPRESSION ART "FOUND"
ABANDONED IN 1937
PUBLIC OFFERED
1937 U.S. Gov't Art Prints

A series of rare oil paintings, watercolors, and etchings were lost during the depression years. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and a select group of a dozen nationally prominent people formed a volunteer advisory committee for art appreciation to create an art program that would give the public a well-needed moral lift. It was the committee's decision to select the world's most famous paintings from the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th centuries. Each painting is being offered to the public at a price of $7.00 each print. Once they are sold, there will be no reprints.

Cradle Head North for Important League Contests

By RICHARD GROSS

If you’re a Penn football enthusiast, consider the following situation.

The team of your dreams (18-4, 5-1 Ivy) is currently on a seven game win streak. You’ve already found yourself in the thick of things and are battling it out in the final minutes of the game. It’s time to go to the next level... whether it be for the Ivy League title, or something a bit bigger.

Penn is currently in the No. 1 spot in the Ivy League, a position they’ve held on to for the past three years.

Then there’s the real deal, the one you’ve been waiting for. The team of your dreams is in the midst of a six out of seven streak, and they are expected to make it seven out of seven. This is where it gets interesting...

Penn’s Harvard tailgate is legendary, and with good reason. It’s a place where fans can come together and enjoy a meal, while cheering on their favorite team. And with Penn’s recent success, the tailgate has only grown in popularity.

If you haven’t been to the tailgate before, now is the time to go. It’s the perfect place to enjoy a meal, while cheering on your favorite team. And with Penn’s recent success, the tailgate has only grown in popularity. So why wait? Head down to the tailgate today and experience all that it has to offer.
