Communications Major Approved By FAS: Will Begin Next Fall

BY STEVEN A. MARQUEZ
Chairman of the Communications major committee, FAS, announced an approved communications major.

The major will go into effect in the fall of 1977.

The program, which originally was submitted to FAS in 1975, was accepted by the Committee on Instruction and given approval by the FAS Board of Governors in 1976.

The program requires 4 years to complete and is designed for students interested in pursuing a career in communications.

The major consists of a core curriculum of courses in communication theory, media analysis, and production, and an area of specialization in one of three fields: print journalism, broadcast journalism, or public relations.

Students will be required to complete a minimum of 124 credits, including 6 credits in a foreign language.

The program is intended to provide a comprehensive education in the field of communications, preparing students for careers in journalism, broadcasting, public relations, and other related fields.

Congress Advances BEOG Funds
To Avoid Agency's First Default

BY DANIEL M. AKST

The Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG) program, the federal student aid program, has been extended for another 90 days.

The extension has been made possible by an additional $315 million in funding, which will be used to meet the needs of students in the first quarter of the academic year.

FAS President Eugene McCarthy said, "This extension is a necessary step to ensure that students are not denied access to Federal aid due to the impending default of the agency.

We are committed to ensuring that our students have the resources they need to pursue their education, and this extension will help us achieve that goal."

ENNIVIRONMENT Exhibits New Sculpture Concept

By BARBARA FRIEDMAN

The Institute of Contemporary Art will exhibit an exhibition of George Segal’s "ENVIRONMENT" the exhibit consists of 16 large-scale sculptures dating from the early '60s to the present. Segal’s Environments represent a new concept in sculpture. In each plaster base of people accumulated by real or imaginary situations. The figure which is part of a whole or a group of people is part of a whole, even when each individual is in a different position. The sculpture is synthetic, a synthesis of the ordinary and the extraordinary. The environments are a permanent and very real representation of modern culture and modern man. Each environment is a setting for a play. The figures are exchanged, Henry and Phillip start discussing the terms of the treaty. UA: Steering the Election?

This week the Undergraduate and Executive Committees ran a referendum to ratify proposed amendments in the constitution of the Undergraduate Assembly. Many students, who initially supported the referendum, are now saying that the results will be of no consequence.

Some students who decided to vote have expressed surprise at the format of the referendum, as a true referendum, which is in fact impossible, is not possible, because it requires the collection of a certain percentage of the university's undergraduate student population. However, it is not possible, because it requires the collection of a certain percentage of the university's undergraduate student population.

Drug Survey
Ugrads Prefer Alcohol

Wednesday, March 3, 1978

Although political views did not have a statistically significant effect on alcohol use, they were significant in analyzing marijuana use and opinions on the marijuana laws.

Fifty percent of the students polled who called themselves liberals used marijuana at least several times a month, as opposed to 65 percent of those who called themselves conservatives and 77 percent of those who called themselves moderates. Thirty percent of the conservatives said they never used it. Nearly half the liberals would like to legalize marijuana possession and dealing, whereas, only seven percent of the conservatives felt that way, and a third want the laws to remain unchanged.

This survey was conducted by Ellen Gershowitz and Orii Jervonetz with the assistance of Barry Bernstein, William Blue, Daniel Cohen, Carol Hatnkin, Donald Montagu, Frank Roth, and Susan and Judy Yarvin. The survey results were processed by the Social Science Data Center.
Pernick Describes Chimpanzee Learning Program

BY JIM WISMER

Chimpanzees possess the "repetitive-reward system for capacity" to "reprogram" the brain's motor and sensory centers for learning a language, according to Psychology Professor David Premack.

Premack, speaking at a Psychology Department Colloquium, described his work at the newly constructed University Primate Facility that houses on chimpanzees, including internationally renowned Sarah.

Premack said he is "interested in the nature of intelligence," which is applicable to study directly his research has convinced him.

"The first phase is 'operationalizing language,' that is, fitting it into smaller classifications. The second phase is: what are the prerequisites for language acquisition are. The third phase is an attempt to explore what we know by knowledge.

In order to study language, Premack has developed a unique communication system for chimpanzees. He uses a set of plastic graphic shapes that can be arranged in a number of ways to express the chimpanzees' thoughts. The chimpanzees have learned that the order of the shapes creates sentences by arranging various shapes in the deck.

"Preaching to Premack," this system is beneficial because "the chimpanzees, who he usually calls "subjects," rely on their short-term memory in constructing statements or answering questions.

The procedure has also been successful on "severely retarded children who could not be taught spoken language or sign language," he explained.

He described an incident that occurred when the chimps were asked--via chips--a color-colored chip was on top of a green colored chip. When a yellow chip was substituted for the green, some of the chimps would grab a green and switch it with the yellow and then say "yes" as an answer necessary.

This transition to the noises has also been witnessed in autistic children.

PGH, Fiscal Controversies Disrupt Usually Calm City Council Meetings

City Council meetings are often characterized by an air of understated calm. However, on March 3, 1976, the meeting room was filled with an unusual degree of tension and debate.

Councilman Joseph Coleman, a veteran of many council meetings, entered the room to find a crowd of activists and advocates. Among them were representatives of the Progressive Party, who had been denied a hearing by the previous administration. Coleman called for a public hearing on the progress of the city's plans for the Pennsylvania General Hospital (PGH), a matter of growing concern to many residents.

It was clear that the meeting would be anything but routine. Mayor Rizzo had already made it clear that he would not back down on his decision to build a new PGH, despite mounting criticism.

The meeting was disrupted by a series of protests and interventions, with Coleman and other council members struggling to maintain order. In the end, the meeting adjourned without reaching a conclusion.

The University Scholars Program

Applications Due April 1, 1976
Nominations Are Now Being Accepted

The University of Pennsylvania recognizes among its undergraduates a small number of outstandingly gifted, angry, motivated, and mature students with precisely defined and often unconventional career plans calling for graduate or professional study. Through its University Scholars Program, the University offers these rare talents the opportunity and the challenge of an individually tailored combined undergraduate and graduate or professional course of study culminating in a doctoral degree.

Eligible students will have shown, through their potential and accomplishments, that they are capable of effectively utilizing the advantages of the program. Some students come from the entering freshman class, because of their unusual promise and their clear graduate or professional goals. Some, having demonstrated in their first year the qualities of talent and motivation required for the program, are enrolled during their freshman year. Others, depending on when their talents and their graduate or professional goals have revealed themselves to the appropriate faculty members, might be chosen during their sophomore or junior years.

Current students: Students presently enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania who wish to apply to the Program must do so through their faculty sponsor. The sponsor, who must be closely acquainted with the student and his or her talents and goals, will nominate the student to the Council only if the student is unusually qualified. A faculty member may also initiate the nomination process. Students will not be considered. Faculty members should reserve the nomination for the truly superior student who should be understood that in any class at Pennsylvania there will be only ten, perhaps only fifteen to twenty University Scholars. Those considered most promising after their credentials have been reviewed by the Council, the final decision will be made by the Council only after it has obtained the consent of the appropriate graduate or professional admissions group.

Price Adjusts to Collegiate Level

By CLEMON L. SMITH

Robert Crocker moved from the hot seat at Pontiac St. John to the凳子 at Penn. Price began the play by the cold seat of a man who had to adjust his skills in the play parks of New England to the indoor rinks of the Philadelphia Athletic Conference.

Price adjusted to the change in his team from the Big School to the Iona. Price, who started his career at Pontiac High School, played his first game at the age of 19 in the 1957-58 season.

Price had the chance to show his skills in college as well. He scored in the first period of the season opener against Delaware.

Price failed to score in the second period of the game against Delaware. However, he made up for it in the third period with a goal that tied the game.

Price adjusted to the new environment and scored in the following game against Princeton. He assisted on three of the goals in the game.

Price continued to adjust to the college level and scored in the next game against New Hampshire. He scored in the final game of the season against Maine.

Price finished the season with 15 goals and 21 assists for a total of 36 points. He was named to the All-America team and was also selected as the Most Valuable Player of the ECAC.

Price ended the season with 15 goals and 21 assists for a total of 36 points. He was named to the All-America team and was also selected as the Most Valuable Player of the ECAC.
