Penn Bands Perform Tonight and Thursday

RICHARD A. STEIN

"Tired of shuffling for students! Battle with the same old routine? Tonight and Thursday the members of Penn will give you the opportunity to enjoy your travels and enjoy some good music.

Tonight, the University Concert Band begins in concert with a presentation at 8 P.M. in 302 College Hall. Newfield Cassizzi, the band's director and conductor, said Monday he is enthusiastic that tonight's concert will improve the image of the group and other pieces including music by Chiccorea. The conductor Gary Harperman. He will lead the ensemble in some of his own works. The band was formed four years ago when a pair of University students established that there was a need for a University jazz band. Penn Campus"
Activities Fee: Why the Council Needs More

By David C. Levine

Next year, the University of Penn- sylvania will raise its annual student fee from $30 to $75. As part of a larger plan, the Finance Committee is considering a fee increase to cover the cost of a new football stadium.

In previous years, the Student Assembly has been the sole source of funds for the stadium. However, in recent years, the Assembly has been unable to raise the necessary funds due to declining membership and lack of support from the student body.

The football stadium is a symbol of the University's commitment to athletics and cultural events. By raising the fee, the University hopes to continue to provide high-quality athletic and cultural programs for its students.

In addition, the fee increase will help to fund other University initiatives, such as the expansion of the music department and the construction of a new science building.

The increase is also necessary to meet the demands of a growing student body. With over 28,000 students, the University is facing increased costs in areas such as housing, food, and security.

Arguments against the fee increase include concerns about the University's ability to provide financial aid for students and the potential impact on student life.

The University believes that the fee increase is necessary to maintain its commitment to providing a top-quality education for all students.

The Void in Student Life

Letters to the Editor

Nickle and Dining the Students

In another one of its short-sighted moves to save money, the University has eliminated free removal of the quad on weekends.

Now, residents have yet another problem to add to the growing list of "residential experiences." At Penn, there are few things more important than the sweat, work, and time that goes into maintaining the quad, which is an integral part of student life.

It is a shame to see such a beautiful space turned into a parking lot, where commercial interests take precedence over the needs of the student body.

The Quad is a public space that belongs to all students, and it should be maintained as such.

Wharton Grades

The Wharton faculty also approved the following motions effective next semester:

- “Students who enter the University as freshmen may take a minimum of four upper-division courses in non-Wharton departments at other accredited institutions if prior approval is granted.”

- “Transfer students only may take non-major courses at the University — any student who has already taken summer courses away may be considered for this program.”

- “Wharton and non-major subjects at accredited institutions if prior approval is granted.”

- “The quality of courses outside the University must be evidenced.”

- “The reason for these changes was a question of the quality of courses outside the University — that the situation has been ‘constrained by the problem of mature students.’”

- “The problem of money.”

Lee's Matter Over Mind

It was the winter of 1974. Alfred Eggleton was interested in a career in electronics and interested in a school in Philadelphia but this time as a starting research. Work will involve that. But she let him make the contact. I've seen seven times at DeWitt.

Eggleton, perhaps the Quakers' best hope in the tourney, carries an impressive 29-8 slate into the action while Park will be in top form for the opening of the NCAA Fencing Tournament today at the Palestra and Hulchman Gym.
