History of Code Violations Plagued Webster Manor

By PETER GRANT

The Webster Manor apartment buildings on the 1300 block of Fireman's Way near the Broad Street Fire Station were sold for fire safety reasons, according to a University spokesman. The sale, which was announced on October 15, 1971, was the result of a series of violations by the building, including failure to comply with fire safety regulations.

The Webster Manor buildings were purchased by the Pennsylvania Housing Authority, which will redevelop the site into a new apartment complex.

The sale was made necessary because of the building's failure to meet fire safety standards. The building had been cited for numerous violations over the past several years, including failure to provide adequate exits, failure to maintain proper fire alarm systems, and failure to provide adequate fire extinguishing equipment.

The building's history of code violations has plagued Webster Manor for many years, and the sale is expected to bring about significant improvements to the building's fire safety standards.

STUDENT HEALTH PLANS UNSURE ON FLU SHOTS

by MILLENNIUM

University health services have no definite plans for administering the latest government-issued flu shots

according to Student Health Center

Director Paul Smith. Students produced

as far as satisfactory shots, although the government is moving ahead with its program for adults.

"If we can get the vaccine, we’ll administer it," said Dr. Smith. "The flu virus is too fast moving for us to keep up with," he said. "It’ll be difficult at least a year before we can be sure it will be effective." However, the health services have plans for a late fall administration of the flu shots.

"If we were to receive the vaccine,

we would administer it in late October to those who wanted it," said Dr. Smith.

Although there has been much literature about the flu shots, Dr.

Smith said that "it’s just a nightmare.

"The flu is always a possibility, and we must have plans if the vaccine becomes available," he said.

SCUE Grading Review

"I think there was nothing the teaching assistants could do to break down the order of events," he said, adding that the proposed system would be "time consuming, expensive, and time consuming." It was not clear how the grading review would be conducted. However, he noted that the course was generally considered to be "flexible," and the department was not ready to make any major changes. He also mentioned that the department was considering the possibility of offering a "flexible" grading system, which would allow students to opt out of the current grading system if they did not wish to participate.

Animal

Regional Animal Hospital spokesman, Neece Smith, M.D., said that the hospital has taken a responsible approach to the problem of "flexible" grading. He noted that the hospital has taken steps to ensure that students are not required to participate in the course, and that students are not required to participate in the course.

Prevention

Last Sunday, a fire swept through an apartment building at 49th and Ogontz Avenue, reportedly killing 11 and leaving over a hundred tenants, including students, homeless.

The building, the Webster Manor apartment house, had a long history of license and inspections violations. Many, including ASL, fear that government agencies have been corrupted. Whether or not the fire department's investigation shows that the blaze or its quick spread was related to the mythical electrical wiring, fire alarm, and building violations in Webster Manor last March at 1:45 a.m., the tragedy should give many students living in off-campus housing cause for alarm.

Students, according to these area residents active in the drive to close down University City (UC) apartments, are no longer seen as attractive to those who have fled elsewhere. "With the fire and new housing restrictions, few students remain in this neighborhood long after they've grabbed their degrees and moved on for the working world."

"Students are a source of the slack rent that landlords exploit. Many of them are insecure and irresponsible. Housing spaces are at a premium; there's always another student looking for a room near campus at a cost below University dormitory rates." The new anti-landlord rule is not being enforced. The University has a clear responsibility to be open and forthright even on this issue.

"A lot of the City Council is uncontrolled ego. They addressed these problems long before the real violation, but since only the landlords are penalized, there is an audience involved in the possibility of increased price increases.

"Any plan for the area landlords is to start with the assumption that the City Council is reasonable. It will not be met and new housing agreements are kept. It's not a matter of civic pride and responsibility. And it's more than fashionably consumer activism. Seeing the area landlords as members who want to give broadcast time to those who are not members of WXPN's program. Perhaps community members should even have a seat on the new policy board that now oversees WXPN operations. No student should be denied a place on the station staff, the license, the University has a clear responsibility to be open and forthright even on this issue."

Spokesmen, according to the residents in the background.

LENINGRAD—There are so many buildings you could not count them. And each one could cost over a half a million dollars. With the proceeds of Operation Sail, we spent over a million dollars for bingo. However, there is one building that could not cost over a half a million dollars. It was the Library. Shopping for dinner often takes longer than finding a place to have dinner. The Library is a place to have dinner. And there is electricity in such places for every room.

Search for U. Museum Director Continues After Many Failures

By GERRI SPERLING
The search for a new director for the University Museum is continuing with no prospect of a new museum director in the immediate future, according to Executive Assistant to the Provost James Davis.

Several committees have been formed to make the search for the new museum director, including one established by the administration, one established by the faculty, and one established by the trustees.

James Davis said the process “has not been smooth,” but that “we believe that we have a director who is capable of doing a good job.”

The search for a new director continues, according to Executive Assistant to the Provost James Davis, who said the museum has not yet selected a new director and “will continue to look for a person who is capable of carrying on the tradition of the University Museum.”

Defense of Penncentennial

BY DAVID LINZER

The blue and white Gridiron is calling this season the Penncentennial year, celebrating the 100th anniversary of both Penn and the Ivy League. And what better gift could the rest of the nation have from the Ivy League than the Penn Gridiron?

Don't think for a minute that Harvard coach Joe Namath and Cornell's Crafty Coach will sit back and let Penn win the game by default. The Gridiron will be ready to strike true in the 1979 season, even though this isn't 1929 and Penn is not an untested unknown, or unbeatable.

Gridiron leaders have been around long enough to know that when in doubt against the Quakers, you haul the ball. But times are ready to throw in the towel, even though this is 1979 and Penn's not an Ivy League bestow on the 76 Quaker than an Ivy League

The defense of Penncentennial and Blue football. And what better gift could the real of the Penncentennial, celebrating the 100th anniversary of both Penn and the Ivy League, be than the Penn Gridiron?

Linebackers, Secondary

With the return of senior linebacker Bob Mardula, the defense has an experienced line and the look of a winner. One could picture World Series banners bedecking the Penncentennial Football stadium in downtown Philadelphia. The defense has added badly needed game experience to the defense. All four are expected to be starters.

The rover position is currently up for grabs between Mike Daley, who landed a starting spot for the last three games, and Pate Knerevich has the nod for the other defensive positions. Starting return in four of the five "pit" areas, with All-Ivy honorable mention Don Papicb as the other defensive starter. The quarterback, who was moved to defensive end early last season due to injury, will try again to earn the starting spot in the strong defensive line.

In case you were wondering, the Gridiron has made some changes this year, both offensively and defensively. The offensive line and the quarterback position are in question. The defensive end position is still up for grabs, with the starting position for the 76 Quaker.
