As a result of a significant increase in the number of Asian-American matriculants, the overall minority population in this year's freshman class is 11.9 percent. According to minority recruitment director Sandy Sanders, this year 269 minority students were admitted to UPenn, compared to 196 in 1974. Sanders attributed the considerable increase to the University's aggressive recruitment efforts, which have been focused on increasing the number of black matriculants. Sanders added she plans to "open doors to minority students" and increase the number of black matriculants.

On Covering the Fight Against Racism

By Michael G. Rose, Senior Staff Writer

The following is the text of a recent letter written to the Daily Pennsylvanian by an anonymous student.

The letter was published in the October 1, 1976 issue of the Daily Pennsylvanian.

Dear Daily Pennsylvanian Staff,

I am writing to express my concern about the way in which the Daily Pennsylvanian has been covering the fight against racism on campus.

I have noticed that the Daily Pennsylvanian has been neglecting to cover important events and initiatives related to the fight against racism.

I believe that the Daily Pennsylvanian should be doing more to cover these events and initiatives, and that it should be covering them in a more comprehensive and accurate way.

I urge the Daily Pennsylvanian to take these issues seriously and to improve its coverage of the fight against racism on campus.

Sincerely,

Anonymous Student

In Search of A Mission

By By Kevin Louie

The conclusion of a recent report by the University of Pennsylvania's Center for the Study of Social Organization (CSSO) has had a significant impact on the University of Pennsylvania.

The report, titled "The Social Organization of the University," was released in October 1976 and has been widely cited in academic circles.

The report concluded that the University of Pennsylvania had a "mission" that was not clearly defined or understood by the University community.

The report recommended that the University of Pennsylvania should develop a clearer understanding of its mission and that this understanding should be communicated to the University community.

I believe that the University of Pennsylvania should take the recommendations of the CSSO report seriously and work towards developing a more clear understanding of its mission.

Sincerely,

Kevin Louie

Muddling: A New Administrative Technique?

By Gregory Oussani

The following is the text of an article published in the Daily Pennsylvanian on October 7, 1976.

The article is titled "Muddling: A New Administrative Technique?"

The article discusses the concept of muddling in administrative decision-making and its implications for the University of Pennsylvania.

The article argues that muddling is a common administrative practice and that it can have significant negative consequences for the University.

I believe that the article provides valuable insights into the nature of administrative decision-making at the University of Pennsylvania.

Sincerely,

Gregory Oussani

From page 4... Despite their defeat, the Quakers continued to play a competitive game. The Midshipmen were fast, and the Quakers were not able to keep up with them.

Decker spotted Jeff Johnson alone in the box and passed the ball to him. Johnson shot wide. With two minutes left in overtime, the ball was turned over to the Midshipmen. It was a moment of tension as the Red and Blue were extended possession to the Midshipmen. It was a moment of excitement as the Quakers' goal seemed insignificant, but it saved the game for them.
