Brown, accompanied by Pittsburgh Mayor Peter Flaherty, began the day at Philadelphia Airport, with stops at the mall and a Buckeye Country cocktail party, ended at the Marriot City Center Hotel, where he spoke to a conference on American foreign policy.

According to Jeff Weinsteins, who met the campaign in San Francisco over the Labor Day weekend, the campaign is being run on an aggressive, high-profile, and targeted approach. "The goal is to reach a high enough percentage of the electorate to ensure a victory," he said.

Admiral Rickover Receives Honor From Engineering School Alumni

BY WISTER DEPLENTY
Admiral Rosamaria Rickover, known for his work with nuclear power in the Navy, received the Harold Pender Award Friday from the University's Division of Electrical Engineering.

A distinguished group of guests gathered at the annual dinner meeting of the Engineering Alumni Society in the University City Holiday Inn to honor the Admiral. The gathering, in addition to commemorating the Admiral's contributions to the development of naval reactor power, is considered to be the father of the nuclear navy. He has been in charge of the Naval Reactors Program since 1945 and is currently director of the Division of Naval Reactors, Energy and Reactors.

Development administrator, Civilian, dinner and the presentation of several awards marked the beginning of the Pender Award. According to the organization, the award is "innovative, another bill to raise money for business who hire unemployed workers. "It doesn't pay for them to expand right now," he said, "and that's where we have the employment problem. Giving the federal government money to make jobs is not the right answer.

Rickover, who works in government industry, "is our chief executive," he said. "He's our leader."

Trying Out the U.A.

By Barbara Kaufman

As one of the freshman representatives profiled in Dave Lerner’s column in the Del’s of October 5, I would like to share my own independent view of my experiences as a freshman. It is frequently noted in Lerner’s articles that my past political involvements and my role as a leader in the Freshman Council, which I joined last year, have given me greater confidence in my ability to work with other people. Although my influence is not as great as Lerner’s, I was elected by my fellow freshmen with whom I have voting rights.

I have been active in student government since my first semester at Penn, where I served as a member of the Student Assembly’s Subcommittee on Financial Aid. This subcommittee was responsible for negotiating a fair system of financial aid for students. I was also a member of the Student Assembly’s Subcommittee on Housing, where I worked on issues related to housing standards and tenant rights.

In addition, I was a member of the Student Assembly’s Subcommittee on the Environment, where I worked on issues related to environmental protection.

I believe that my involvement in student government has given me a unique perspective on the issues facing Penn students and the University as a whole. I have learned to work effectively with other people, to listen to their concerns, and to represent their interests in the larger context of the University.

I am excited about the possibility of being a student leader and look forward to contributing to the positive change that can occur through the power of collective action.

Barbara Kaufman is a sophomore in the University of Pennsylvania's School of Arts and Sciences.

Letters to the Editor

The Class of ’79 vs. the Class of ’78

In the Del’s of October 22, a faculty member stated that the Class of ’79 is smaller than the Class of ’78. However, I would like to point out that the Class of ’79 is actually larger than the Class of ’78.

The Class of ’79 consists of almost 10,000 students, while the Class of ’78 consists of approximately 8,000 students. This difference is due to the increasing popularity of Penn’s undergraduate education, which has led to an increase in the number of applicants each year.

Furthermore, the Class of ’79 is more diverse than the Class of ’78, with students from a wider range of backgrounds and experiences. This diversity enriches our combined class experience and provides a unique opportunity for learning and growth.

I believe that both the Class of ’79 and the Class of ’78 have much to contribute to the University and to each other. It is important that we support and respect each other, regardless of our class year.

Seth L. Rosen, ’79

A Lesson in Inhospitality

It was then that for the first time I realized how little I knew about the role of a student in the hospital. I had expected to find a place where people could come to seek help and find comfort. But instead, I found a place where people were treated with disdain and ignorance.

It was then that I understood how important it is for hospitals to have policies that ensure the rights of patients. I believe that hospitals should work to create an environment where patients feel respected and valued.

Penn coach Harry Gamble knew he had to do something about the defense before the game began. So did the Quaker defenseless line. And as did the home-crowding of 13,889. Everybody knew it had to be drastic.

They knew how hard it would be. The Quakers had given up an unmolested penalty shot. Len Daniels easily rammed it home with 31:19 to play. It put Penn in the strange position of being tied. It was half time with the Red and Blue leading only 7-6. Not a strong situation for a defense that's known its way around.

But the Penn defense is always up to the challenge and was ready with a masterful defensive effort. The Quakers took quick possession and methodically moved down the sidelines. A few good saves by Ertman and the Secondary really did the job.

The first quarter was put to rest with 2:42 left in the 10 minutes overtime period when Tom Dobbii's ean was on the field of the Bobcats. The Elis were moving and doing anything about it. The Penn defense was out there to do anything about it.

The Elis didn't wait very long to put the defense to rest. In the first quarter. The Elis were moving and doing anything about it. The Penn defense was out there to do anything about it. But the Penn defense is always up to the challenge and was ready with a masterful defensive effort. The Quakers took quick possession and methodically moved down the sidelines. A few good saves by Ertman and the Secondary really did the job.

For Quaker coach Harry Gamble, who must be a Texan at heart, he looks to the defense to stop the Bobcats. The Elis were moving and doing anything about it. The Penn defense was out there to do anything about it. The Elis didn't wait very long to put the defense to rest. In the first quarter. The Elis were moving and doing anything about it.
