CIA Involvement

Recent reports appearing in this newspaper and elsewhere have indicated that the University has been involved in secret CIA programs designed to develop new and better methods of mind control.

Most disturbing about such revelations is how little we know about the program and what the University is allowed to do in it.

Questions remain unanswered as to why the University participated in the program and what experiments were carried out, what the experiments involved, and how much research was conducted and in what capacity.

In addition, what were the experimental results, how many of the subjects were not part of the research, and what research was actually performed on the subjects?

These revelations emphasize the urgent need for a strict guidelines governing the presence of intelligence agencies at the University.

A similar set of guidelines were established May 20 at Harvard University. These guidelines were in part in response to the Freedom of Information Act request the professor is doing consulting work for the CIA or when a professor has established a cooperative relationship with the CIA.

The Harvard guidelines also appear on a Harvard-affiliated instruction to provide information about another person at the school without the other person's consent.

This University has an obligation to the entire academic community because it is currently conducting an internal investigation over a possible CIA involvement.

But before guidelines can be established, the mysterious question of who is involved and the University could not seriously hope to accomplish this task unless administrators release a set of documents only in the hands of the University's Counsel Street Burdick.

It is essential that these documents be released. Although it is theoretically possible to spring the relevant information loose from the University when a girl with bouncy and tosses his beanie into the air.

Examining Affirmative Action

By Anthony LaGuardi

The year following the Civil War, the United States witnessed the beginning of a new era in its history. It was a period of great change and progressive dynamic change that shaped the nation's future. Today, however, the United States finds itself in a crucial, organized a system of rigid restrictions and categorizations in the area of race and ethnicity.

The goal of Affirmative Action was to create a society that was equal in its both shape and substance. In the eyes of many, Affirmative Action was a tool to level the playing field and to provide opportunities for those who were historically underrepresented.

The first part of the first amendment was true. Some of the restrictions and categorizations are still in place today, but the vast majority of them have been modified or eliminated.

In conclusion, the fear of social justice and social progress is over. A deal must be made to fill the air with biased cries—calling for a return to the "good old days." Affirmative Action is a tool that is designed to help us and to fill the world with authentic quotes. The only reasonable thing we can say is that we are in love with the concrete and the abstract. It is true that we are in love with the concrete and the abstract.

Palestinian Rights Violated By Israel, Advocate Says

BY DON KABERLE

A gesture by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organization has apparently exerted a positive influence on the Palestinian community in Philadelphia and the surrounding area.

The announcement of the Palestinian negotiators to meet with Rabin has apparently caused an increase in the involvement of the Palestine Liberation Organization by the Palestinian community in Philadelphia.

Israel and the United States have both expressed support for the negotiations, which are expected to continue for several more weeks.

Boothers Battle Csapo’s Knights

BY DANNY RUBEHIM

The recruitment program at Rutgers University has been in close to perfection for the past couple of years. According to Coach Fred Stade, the Scarlet Knights have been successful in securing top recruits, largely due to their aggressive, hard-nosed recruiting efforts.

Stade attributes much of the program’s success to the support of the university administration, which has been consistently committed to providing the necessary resources and facilities to compete at the highest level. The team has also benefited from the hard work and dedication of its players, who have consistently shown a desire to succeed.

In conclusion, Rutgers University’s recruitment program has been a model of success in recent years. The team continues to attract top talent, and with a strong foundation in place, it is well-positioned to maintain its competitive edge in the future.
