English House Planned For Ugrad Dormitory

By JEFFREY N. SARKER

The University has gained clearance from the City Planning Board to build English House, a 200-space dormitory, in the next fall. Director of Facilities Development Paul Perlow confirmed the news in a telephone call on Tuesday.

The English House, located in Chestnut Street between 34th and 35th Streets, would be a hub of freshman activity, according to Perlow. "It is in a very good location, very well suited to the needs of freshmen," he said.

The English House will be a welcome addition to the University's current housing facilities, which are at their maximum capacity. With the new dormitory, the University will be able to accommodate an additional 200 students, bringing the total number of freshmen housed on campus to 400.

Trip by Administrators Kicks Off West Coast Recruiting Program

By MARIA SHAAR

The University's west coast recruiting program was launched this week with a three-day trip to Los Angeles, San Francisco and Berkeley. The purpose of the trip, according to vice-dean and director of Wharton's Development Program, is to attract top-quality students.

The trip, which begins in Los Angeles today, is part of a larger recruiting effort that will also include visits to other west coast universities. The University is looking to attract students from a variety of backgrounds, including those from underrepresented minority groups.

Computerized Circulation System Is Inaugurated in Three Libraries

By STEVEN GOLDMAN

The University is installing a new computerized circulation system in three key campuses in an effort to make record keeping more efficient.

The system, which will be in place by the end of the year, will allow the University to track the location of books and other library materials. This will make it easier for students to find the materials they need and will also help to reduce the amount of time that library staff spend searching for lost items.

Foreign Study Opportunities Abound at U.

By LARRY FRANKEN

Many students at some time during their college careers wish that they have the opportunity to study abroad. For many, this dream can become a reality through the University's foreign study programs.

The University offers a wide range of opportunities for students to study abroad. These programs are available to students in a variety of fields, including the natural sciences, social sciences, and humanities.

University Libraries Enter the Computer Age as a Modernization Project Proceeds

By ELIZABETH SANGER

The University's libraries are undergoing a major modernization project, which is set to transform the way students access information.

The project, which is being carried out in collaboration with the University's Information Technology Services, will provide students with access to a wider range of resources and will also improve the efficiency of the library system.

$1.3 Million Surplus Achieved by Hospital In Fiscal Year 1977

By MARK LEVITAN

The Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania (HUP) achieved an unexpected $1.3 million surplus for Fiscal Year 1977, its second in a row. The hospital's operating revenue, which was $87 million, far exceeded the $85 million budgeted for the year.

The Hospital's president, Dr. Richard T. Recht, attributed the surplus to several factors. "We were able to achieve economies in personnel and supplies, which helped to boost our bottom line," he said.

The surplus, which was announced last month, is a significant achievement for the hospital, which has struggled with financial problems in recent years. The Hospital has been working to improve its financial position, and the surplus is a sign that this effort is paying off.

Leviton said he did not know whether HUP had ever achieved a surplus of such magnitude before. The surplus, which was announced last month, is a significant achievement for the hospital, which has struggled with financial problems in recent years. The Hospital has been working to improve its financial position, and the surplus is a sign that this effort is paying off.

CAMPUSS RADICALISM

Student Activism Wanes, But Remnants Persist

By RICHARD E. GORDON

This is the second of a two-part series on student political and social activities at the University in the 1960's and 70's. Yesterday Jeffrey York, professor in the Political Science Department, noted that when he joined the university faculty in the early 1960's, the campus was dominated by various political organizations, mainly the Committee to End Campusespying, the Committee Against Racial Prejudice and the Committee to End War on Vietnam. A year later, York said, he witnessed an increased interest in political activities on the campus, with the rise of the Civil Rights Movement and the anti-war movement, especially in the aftermath of the My Lai Massacre.

Like many univerities, Penn began to adopt the new, more progressive ways of the late 60's. One of the greatest changes was the proliferation of student groups and organizations. The rise of these groups was fueled by the desire for social change and the desire to make a difference. The groups that were established at Penn in the late 60's and early 70's were often radical in nature, and they sought to bring about change through various means, including political action.

However, the activism of the late 60's and early 70's has waned over time, and the remnants of these groups have faded into the background. This is not to say that the legacy of the radical movement is gone, but rather that it has been absorbed into the fabric of the university, where it is less visible but still present.

One of the most significant changes that has occurred in the university is the increased diversity of the student body. This has led to a more diverse range of political and social activities, and the university is now home to a much greater range of perspectives.

Despite the waning of the radical movement, the university remains a place of political and social activism, with many different groups and organizations working to bring about change. The university is a place where people can come together to fight for their beliefs, and it is this spirit of activism that has made the university what it is today.

Free University is Re-Opened by Volunteers

By LARRY FRIDMAN

The Free University, a University community program that previously was facing possible cancellation due to a lack of funds, has been re-opened by student-volunteers. The university was scheduled to close on Wednesday, September 27, as a result of a lack of funds, but on Friday, September 30, it was announced that the university would remain open.

The decision to re-open the Free University was made by its director, Frank Gigler, who said that he "got a great number of people interested" in the university and that he was "very pleased" with the results.

The Free University was founded in 1975 and has been a staple of University community life. The university offers courses in a variety of subjects, including literature, art, and music, and it also provides a forum for political discussion and activism.

The university is run by a council of volunteers, who are elected by the students. The council is responsible for making decisions about the university's operations, including its budget and course offerings.

The council has been working to raise funds for the university, but it has been difficult to find sufficient support.

The decision to re-open the Free University is a positive development for the university and its students, who have been lobbying for its continuation. It is hoped that the university will be able to continue to operate on a sustainable basis in the future.

Thinks college is one big timeout.

The library is also gradually implementing a program to limit use of the library from 9 til 2 on Saturdays, which will require personal security and will protect the library's collection from theft and vandalism.

Other modifications were made in August by a search committee, headed by Professor Frank Bowman, who was appointed by Dean of Instruction and Curriculum Sandra Schwartz. Bowman is now head of the College of General Studies. His responsibilities include supervising academic advising in the college.

However, the college and universities will continue to borrow money, delay expenditures, and lobby for increased taxes and increased spending for education, as President Martin Meyerson said Wednesday. At this point, the University cannot implement a program to limit use of the library during the summer, Brownlee said. As a result, the library will remain open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. during the summer.

The library was closed from 9 to 2 on Saturdays last year, and the University's appropriation benefits from the Commonwealth.

Netwomen Head North

When the women's tennis team heads north this weekend to participate in the Eastern Collegiate Tennis Association meet, they will do so with a new head coach in the position of being ruled ineligible for the entire season. It's ridiculous to jeopardize the position of being ruled ineligible for the entire season. It's a real honor that she came to Penn after all of her achievements," stated Terry Drinker.

Not surprisingly, Tuppeny and Bernstein were still pressurized to come up with another brilliant yet clever theme. Afterall, you can't be the top team in the nation every year. That's another reason Wagner's team would stay in the race for the Ivy League championship. Wagner will certainly have a tough year, but they will stay competitive in every game. It's a real shame that we didn't get the opportunity to see their potential. Penn is good. They beat us last year, and we're much stronger this year. That's another reason why we're confident that we can beat them this year. They're still top five runners. The Crimson is a formidable team, and we're looking forward to facing them. Overall, it's a great opportunity for us to prove ourselves against a top team.

The Crimson's prospects are even better this year, as they have a few key players back from last year. It stands to reason that they will be a more formidable team this year when we go up against them. The Crimson is a strong team, and we're looking forward to the challenge. Overall, it's a great opportunity for us to prove ourselves against a top team.
Running Penn Revs Up for Lions in Baker Field Battle

Andy Gasper was held for a second

LION EYES—270-pound quarterback Bob Gamble from the Columbia defensive line in Penn's 14-7 win against Lehigh a year ago. The Big Red and Blue, minus since graduated Granstein, take on Columbia at the Lions' Baker Field Saturday (1:30 PM). WEEKEND PREDICTIONS: 6-2 to 11-0. Columbia probably will not be able to defeat the Lions this year.

Starting All Over Again

Andy Gasper was held for a second straight game last week in the Temple-Penn battle. As a result, he will not be available against Columbia this Saturday. Gasper has been the key to the team's recent success and is expected to be a big factor against the Lions.

Why Not the Best?

The course of Ivy history may be a battle of good against evil. The Ivy Presidents, by their actions and inactions, have created a situation that could lead to the destruction of the Ivy principles.

The Ivy Principle

Twenty-three years ago the eight Ivy Presidents wrote an agreement which created a formal athletic competition. The Ivy League is a formal agreement between the eight Ivy institutions and is the only way to compete in intercollegiate athletics.

Andy Geiger attributes this struggle to a "natural healthy competition." He believes it is the Ivy principle that drives the competition and is the only way to achieve athletic excellence.

Andy Geiger talks of a natural need to excel, to be the best, and to be the leader in the Ivy League. Andy Geiger claims that a return to the '54 guidelines is the only way to achieve this goal.

What the Ivy Group needs most is either a re-affirmation of the '54 agreement or a new agreement that reflects the current state of the Ivy institutions. Andy Geiger believes that the erosion process is Inevitable, and that the only way to stop it is to return to the '54 agreement.
