Experts Discuss Foreign Policy, Soviet Relations

By MARK SELIN

Practical and theoretical issues of foreign policy were the subject of a three-day conference opened Monday at Swarthmore College. The conference, which ended Thursday, was sponsored by the University's American Institute for Diplomacy and Foreign Affairs and was attended by a number of internationally recognized foreign policy specialists.

Upcoming events included: "Soviet-American Strategic Arms Limitation (SALT) talks, and foreign policy objectives for both the Soviet Union and the United States in East Europe." The sessions were designed to examine the conference's main themes: "The messy level of foreign policy making," the complex behavior of foreign policy making, and the simple as in turn, the simple as the symposium progressed. "Today's session, which began at 8:45 a.m., is "Affluent Assessment of Cardiac Performance," and the Consequences of Treatment," he said. "The presentation of the heart is pretty unique opportunity for both students and professionals." All of the sessions are being held in the Boiler Auditorium in the University Museum.

A Contradiction Between Quality and Apathy

By Tom Crowley

As a student athlete, I have a distinct position on Penn sports and the criticism it has received. The problem at the root of much of the criticism is that we are athletes, and the only ones who should care about our performance are other athletes, coaches, and fans. But we are people too, and we have feelings and aspirations, just like any other student. The fact that we attend an Ivy League school is to a great extent a source of pride for us, and we want to do our best in all areas of our lives. The problem is that people often assume that because we are athletes, our performance is the only thing that matters.

I am writing in response to the article "General Alumni Society and Appreciate That You Cannot Cover Student Component of a University-Past, Present and Future of the Ivy" by JUDITH RUBENSTEIN. She states that the students' component of the University is in danger of being forgotten. I strongly disagree with this statement.

First of all, at any other respectable university, the students' component of the University is the focus. This is because the students are the ones who make up the majority of the University's population. The University exists to serve the students, and it is the students who are responsible for maintaining its reputation.

Second, I feel Feldman has misinterpreted the Ivy Principle. Let's examine the quote from the charge to the Penn Athletics Committee. "We are a university, not an athletic organization. If and when the athletic program becomes more important than the academic program, we will be confirming our worst suspicions."

What is the level of spirit expected towards its football team. The fact is that the football team is the most popular sport on campus, and it is the one that draws the most attention. But this is not to say that the other sports are not important. They are all important, and they all contribute to the overall atmosphere of the University.

Finally, I would like to add that there is no reason for the students to be divided. We are all part of the same community, and we should be working together to uphold the University's reputation. No one should be left behind.

In conclusion, I feel the article is an attempt to create a divide between the students and the University. It is a attempt to make us feel like we are not valued, and that our efforts are not appreciated. But I believe that we are valued, and that our efforts are appreciated. And I believe that we should be working together to make the University a better place for all of us.

Macho Teamsters Show They Can Toot Their Own Horns

By Dave Lieber

Johnny Morris was standing on the corner of 34th Street in Philadelphia, laughing and talking to a group of students who were gathered around him. It was almost like the way the coach of the truck drivers was speaking, wearing a long black coat and smoking a cigarette. But there was one key difference: Morris was not a coach, and he was not in Philadelphia. He was in the middle of a labor dispute.

In an article by Tom Crowley, the students are described as being "arrogant" and "self-centered." However, it is important to remember that these students are just like any other students, and they are trying to get a good education.

It is true that some of the students may be asking for more, but it is not true that they are asking for something that is not possible. The students are simply asking for what they believe is fair.

In conclusion, I think that the students are being mistreated by the University. They are asking for something that is not unreasonable, and they deserve better.

Streaking Racquetwomen Set to Smash Rutgers

If Claire Collins can expect to be loose and free-swinging as she is expressed in dealing with interviews, the women's tennis team will be constantly pushed by a tough match listeners welcome with Rutgers.

Collins appeared for an interview yesterday drenched out from lunch to smoke cigarettes, smile quietly, a characteristic smile, and an energetic mood. Lining forward is high gear.

Lafayette and Lehigh haven’t had too many weeks when these two trouble-filled teams were finding more ways to lose a game than Bert Laney did in practice. From 1983 to 1985, the last three years they met, Lafayette lost to the visiting Leopards in each game.

For Pete it was the guidance of Tom Robert and the running of Denny Grommes that breathed life into the fourth straight Leopards’ offense, not exactly clashing during the past three weeks. Grommes was the key, as was a very, very physical game. Lafayette was counting on Paul Robertson to play the ball, because, with the way the game was going, we’d have to. We’re on the field, because we’d come in here and go out there, and our two have been here for a long time, longer than for the last three years. We have to run, and we have to catch, and we have to play as a team.
