Health Farms Face woes If Fund Denial Continues

By RICHARD E. GORDON

The financial figures for the parking office, which lost $5 million in the first six months of the current fiscal year, show that the budget for the office is more than $3 million higher than the previous year.

The office, which is responsible for the operation of parking lots and garages on campus, has been operating at a loss for several years. Despite efforts to reduce expenses and improve operations, the office continues to operate in the red.

According to the latest figures, the office has a $4.5 million loss for the first six months of the fiscal year, compared to a $2 million loss for the same period last year. The loss is due primarily to an increase in expenses, including wages and benefits, and a decrease in revenue from parking fees.

Although the office has implemented several cost-cutting measures, including reducing the number of parking attendants and cutting back on maintenance and repair work, these efforts have not been enough to offset the growing expenses.

The office is asking for an additional $4 million in funding to cover the deficit, but the university is facing budget constraints and is unlikely to approve the request. The office is now considering other options, such as increasing parking rates or outsourcing some operations.

The situation is causing concern among parking users, who rely on the office to provide safe and convenient parking options on campus. Some students and faculty members have expressed concerns about the potential impact of the deficit on the availability and affordability of parking on campus.

Students Charge Attacks By Rallying Truckers

By JONATHAN GREER

The University has announced plans to increase the number of security personnel at its facilities as a result of recent attacks by truckers.

The attacks have been occurring on a weekly basis, with the latest incident occurring last week. In response, the university has decided to hire additional security officers to patrol the area.

The decision comes after a series of meetings with local law enforcement officials and truckers' representatives. The university has also reached out to local businesses to discuss ways to improve security in the area.

The university has not yet released details on the number of officers or the specific areas that will be covered.

Buckminster Fuller Office To Remain in U. Building

The university has decided to keep the Buckminster Fuller Office at 3400 Market Street, where it has been located since 1985.

The decision was made after a review of options for the office. The university considered several alternatives, including a move to a new location in downtown Philadelphia.

The office, which is named after the renowned architect and inventor Buckminster Fuller, provides services to the university community, including advising on innovative ideas and initiatives.

The university has not yet released a timeline for the move, but is expected to announce details in the coming months.

Parking Office Aches Profit During Period of Expansion

By ERIC JACOBS

The university's parking office has seen a significant increase in profit during the past year, driven by a combination of factors.

The office has implemented several cost-saving measures, including reducing the number of parking attendants and cutting back on maintenance and repair work. These efforts have helped to offset the increasing expenses of labor and materials.

In addition, the office has seen an increase in revenue from parking fees, due to a higher demand for parking spaces on campus.

The office has also benefited from increased occupancy rates, as more students and faculty members choose to park on campus rather than driving to work.

The office is now considering ways to reinvest the profits into improvements to the parking system, such as the installation of new technology or the expansion of existing facilities. The office is also considering ways to reach out to new customers, including students and faculty members at other universities in the area.

Associate Comptroller Dennis M. Sierro, who oversees the parking office, said that the money from the profit will be used to improve the parking experience on campus.

"We will be using the profits to improve the parking experience on campus," Sierro said. "We will be looking at new technology and ways to make the system more efficient."

What appears to be a large increase from 1975-76 to 1977-78 is misleading, however. The University delayed granting salary increases in 1976-77 until January 1, 1977. Due to this one-month delay, only part of the increase awarded in 1975-76 was calculated for the year by the AAUP.

In 1959-77, accordingly, the AAUP included both that year's recent increase and the previous year's remaining unawarded salary increase in its figures.

Break-Up of Oil Companies Debated at Campus Meeting

By ELIZABETH WILSON

"Even if you took Exxon and broke it down into four companies, parts of those four companies would still be among the top thirty companies by revenue in the United States. Exxon was the top company," said the leader of the faculty, Russell L. Marshak, a professor in the humanities, in a meeting of the Penn Faculty Censor on Thursday.

Approximately 30 students attended the event which included a debate on the unbundling of oil companies. The debate, which is currently involved in a campus labor dispute, defeated the Teamsters, which is currently involved in a labor dispute with the University, 34-33. The Senate, apparently swayed by a conservative viewpoint on the part of the students, refused to pass the final bill. "The drive which is marked by enthusiastic participation on the part of the students... is a crusade against the conservative viewpoint on the part of the audience, centered primarily around the recognized liberal and rightist viewpoints on the part of the audience," said a conservative student.

The debate, which was marked by enthusiastic participation on the part of the students, was centered primarily on the definition of horizontal divestiture, which a trust can be broken up vertically by which an oil company can be broken up horizontally. "The traditional definition of horizontal divestiture has been the classification of a company into smaller local units," said a conservative student. "We have always made the point that ultimately the appropriation will be passed," he said. "It is conceivable that the appropriation will only result in one company to line up larger than Exxon's line-up." The Teamsters have lobbied vigorously against the appropriation because of the University's large holdings in the oil industry.

University officials expressed optimism about the chances of getting the appropriation. "I really think that ultimately the appropriation will be passed," said a conservative student. "We have a feeling we will get the appropriation." The Teamsters have lobbied vigorously against the appropriation because of the University's large holdings in the oil industry.

If you are a college student preparing for a career in the visual performing arts, here is a unique opportunity to earn 12 credits while gaining practical work experience as an apprentice in a distinguished department. State Funding

The Pennsylvania Senate has done a terrible thing in denying the University's appropriations of $17 million. Apparently this pressure has prompted legislators who previously supported the University to switch their allegiance over to the Teamsters. The allocation went down by only two votes, meaning that only two Senators voted in favor of the appropriations bill. As usual, the two Senators who voted against the appropriations bill were politicians who voted in favor of the University's budget. Senate should rise above this pettiness and reconsider its action in order to best serve the state, the University, and the thousands of people affected.

The University has now become the victim of more Harrisburg politicking than have the other state-related schools. The University's sense of responsibility and commitment to the state is not a matter of controversy. As a matter of fact, the University was denied $17 million by the state legislature due in large part to the University's refusal to lay off its housekeepers. Thus, a disproportionate and unreasonable penalty is being imposed on the University if such an important productive institution is cut off from the state legislature.

The University chose not to rehire some of its lab workers in order to save some money. The lab workers were watching the students, especially to women and minority students, in the laboratory so that the students can learn something about the hazards in the laboratory. The university, though it was only 8:30 P.M. It was not good. I became rather upset knowing that I didn't have a cent with me. That it was not the money that he took, but rather that I was used. I didn't sleep too well. The next day, I couldn't walk down the street without making sure that I reach my destination. It is dark. There is no reason to. If you are alone, call security at 243-7297. A Plea for Security Consciousness by University Women

I would like to address this to all the residents of the University community and especially to those who are members of the fraternity system. If you frequent the library, you should stay late at night. In the three years I have lived at West Philadelphia, I have never gone out alone at night. My protector is now the University's night watchman. My protector can be any one of your friends.

150s Battle Army Wishbone

"By MIKE LEXTON"

"Today is Franklin Field at 7:30 pm as the Penn Lightweights (1-2) will meet Army (3-1), a team the Quakers have never beaten by 10 or more points."

"We want to beat Army badly," said Bill Wagner, "but our team is very young."

"The kids are fired up and should be ready to go," said Lyons. "Because of the Military Prep's defensive variations, the Quaker offensive line has practiced new blocking assignments."

"The defense is directed at removing the inside runner and generally shut down the wishbones. Lyman was extremely pleased with the offensive line's performance at Kutztown," said Lyons. "The team is blocking much better in the running back."

"The Quakers should be ready though, coming off successive victories against Lafayette and Kutztown. Enthusiasm is high and practices have progressed well," said Lyons.

"We want to beat Army badly," said Jeff Arnel. "This is as close as we've come all year."

"With top singles player Jan Bernstein leading the way and our momentum going, we're going toward and we've done that again this week," said Forgotten (Grand). "If they come at the top of their game, we don't do enough, as the Penn women won five of the six matches."

"This is as close as we've come all year to realizing our potential," added Bernstein. "If they come out the same as against Kutztown, we'll be ready.""

The Quaker harriers (5-1) lost captain St. Joe's Sholtes-less, the runners dropped became a team without a leader.

Goalie Ertmann is neither big nor fast, just a team that played mostly two years ago. No, Quaker forward Karen Paine has the team on the right track. She's just out of high school, but still has the speed and skill to lead the team.

Angstadt rallied for the Quakers' final goal. It mattered little indeed as the Duke defense did a job of containing the game. The Blue Devils held off the Blue Devils.

The Quakers (2-3-3) are only a .500 team, but they're playing good football. They have a chance to win the Ivy League.
