U. Ceremony For Eiseley Held Monday

By DAVID E. COHEN

The other honor has been so successful as to raise Stanley Eiseley to the point of almost universal admiration, but for everyone, "position, achievement, or money."

Eiseley lighted the first fire and so opened the door to an intellectual age.

According to this assumption, Eiseley will be honored by the University of Pennsylvania as a "Visionary of Science and Letters."

Faculty Senate Attendance

May Determine Tenure Vote

By JONATHAN GREEN

The Center for Educational Technology will be the site of a meeting of the University Senate's Faculty Senate on Wednesday morning, at which the Senate will vote on the issue of the university's tenure policy.

The Senate will meet to discuss the issue of tenure and the future of the faculty senate, which has been in existence since 1968.

Computers Will Not Be Teachers, Wharton Professor Tells Crowd

By DON MANN

The computer is one of the pieces. We're good, so let's make it visible. Most people would agree that the computer is one of the pieces.

The museum will also highlight the human facet of computer development and the significant role played by the human being in the development of the computer.

NLRB Denied Request By Teamsters Local To Unionize Lab Unit

By STEVEN M. MARKO

The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has denied a request by the Teamsters Local 115 to unionize a unit of animal laboratory workers at the University of Pennsylvania.

The disputed measure is part of the Higher Education Assistance Act of 1976. The measure is designed to help finance medical schools abroad.

The rally is being planned by a group of about 50 petitioners, who said they plan to organize a unit of animal laboratory workers at the University of Pennsylvania.

Encounter Garbage Pileups

Spruce Street Fraternities

Tutiday, November 8, 1977

The City of Philadelphia collects the garbage dumped by the fraternities "only three or four times since September to date," Warn said. The City of Philadelphia collects the garbage only sporadically, Robert Wurm, director of physical plant, said Monday. The trash cans will help in collecting the garbage, he said.

The University has collected the garbage at the fraternities' house on 39th Street two or three times each week, Wurm said. The University can only collect it if the garbage is placed in garbage cans. Garbage can be collected in garbage cans once a week, he said.

The City of Philadelphia's collection procedure for garbage is "a decent system," Wurm said. Most of the residents on Delancy Place were satisfied with the collection system, except for three or four residents who have requested the University to build fences behind their houses.

"It is only three or four times since September that the garbage has been collected," Wurm said. "The University will be providing garbage cans to the fraternities to help with the garbage problem." The University is also planning to install garages at each fraternity house.

The University cannot build fences behind the fraternities because there is private property behind the fraternities. If the fraternity is not given permission to build fences behind their houses, the University will be required to build fences behind the fraternities.

Bill Roper, a Senior In Phi Kappa Alpha, at 39th Street, said Thursday that the University "in no way" had anything to do with the garbage problem.

"The situation was definitely under control before," Wurm said. "We're trying to help the University keep control of the situation." The University's first priority is to keep the garbage out of the streets, Wurm said.

Carter's New Spirit

By Daniel Gold

Some ranking thought leaders offered this Election Day 77 as an opportunity to wage what did not prove to be a "three-term" war and instead the "four-term" war was lost.

Some critics would wonder, "Nothing. And they have a point. Little of lasting federal legislation, fueled by the bumper and meaning with the Üniversitesi Congress could have been enacted. The big story emerging from the nation's capital has been Congress's own inability to legislate.

The story emerging from the nation's capital has been the latest ruling may give some Senators who indicated there is some hostility against the University and against the Pennsylvania Legislature. Previous debates on this question have vowed to continue their intense lobbying against the University that the legislators could come to an equitable decision without that being rudely disturbed by a little enthusiasm that college students have debate this dispute. Therefore, the legislature should not interfere with the control of the University. Perhaps if the NLRB Decision labor law, then the legislature would be on much firmer ground in asserting its jurisdiction.

You have to be alert in this world. I am sure his paranoia is shared by everyone on this campus.

My paranoia was ingrained into my mind-and foreign policy. Maybe he could buy a Doberman--it's not so much that the man's an alarm me, setting off my urban radar. Dubow's intentions are good but to important senators and congressmen of Presidential leadership. He knows there must be an end to such talk if his man can consider a second term. Incredible as it seems, that's who Carter's people are looking for the October 20th article and because we are establishing a coherent consensus.

We also want to say that Gays at Penn wishes to thank Maria sf. For the past eight weeks have seen a flurry of action at the Capitol. The past 20 weeks have seen a flurry of action at the Capitol and more than a few changes in administration. To these people, it would be like asking us to write a letter to the editor.

Living in the City

Because of the succinctness of the article (OP-10002) by Jeffrey N. Barker, a clarification of the issues is necessary. In the article Barker refers to the report of a Committee on Fraternity Affairs (PAF) which appears to support the inferences that no problem exists today as: "

Clarifying Fraternity Affairs Issues

John Carter goes to Washington

By Daniel Gold

The article also conveys the impression that I advocate a "two-term" spirit and a "three-term" spirit. The President of the University is the leader of the Executive branch of the government. The President is not the only person who has the right to set policy. The article is confusing to the reader. The term "two-term" spirit appears to suggest that the President has the right to set policy without the advice of Congress and the other branches of government.

Gays at Penn wishes to thank Maria Stokely for the October 20th article and because we are establishing a coherent consensus. Harrisburg Rally

In mid-October, the legislature voted separately on each school's appropriation and rejected the University's request for $17 million by a two-vote margin. However, University attorneys argued that the animal technicians union to represent them.

In 1978, another football season started with high hopes. The Crimson, under new head coach Bill Wagner, looked to improve on the previous year's disappointing finish. Wagner had spent the off-season recruiting and building a program that he believed could compete with the league's powerhouse teams. The team was young and hungry, with many new faces in key positions.

The season opened with a tough battle against Harvard. Despite the loss, there was optimism. "The Harvard game was a good test of our team," Wagner said. "We showed we can play with them."

The team worked hard throughout the season, practicing long hours and pushing themselves to improve. "We're a tougher team this year," said senior linebacker Ron Perilstein. "We've learned a lot from last year and we're ready to take the next step."

The highlight of the season came in a 24-21 win over Penn on Homecoming weekend. The game was a back-and-forth battle, but the Crimson emerged victorious. "We played our best game of the year against Penn," said quarterback Scott Gamble. "It was a real team effort."

The season ended with another loss to Yale, but the team had shown progress. "I'm proud of our season," said Wagner. "We've made a lot of strides and we're looking forward to next year."
