that their rights and personal freedoms. On May 19, 1979, as the 1980 election cycle was about to begin, an unusual incident occurred at the University of Pennsylvania. A group of University employees asked the University to change its policies on the University's financial aid programs. The group, led by Judith Rubenstein, the University's Credit Manager, urged the University to make changes in its financial aid programs that would benefit students. The University agreed to consider the group's concerns, and on May 20, 1979, the University announced a new financial aid program that would provide more aid to students. The program was called the University Assistance Program (UAP).

The UAP was designed to provide financial aid to students who were in financial need. The program was based on the student's financial need, as determined by the University's financial aid office. The program was designed to provide more aid to students who were in financial need, and less aid to students who were not in financial need. appraise and personal tax the roughly passed last week. The bill has not been encouraged the individual appropriations for colleges and universities.

According to a spokesman for the Majority Leader Henry Keano (D-Philadelphia), the house was planning to wait until the House acts on the final million-funding bills to consider any individual appropriations.

In the Senate, the status of the University's appropriation is questionable. Heavy Teamster lobbying was the apparent cause of the Senate's approval of 102. The House has not yet passed the personal income tax bill, falling 18 million revenue package necessary to fund the schools.

The House has already approved any of the components of the 1300 million dollar appropriation. What's needed is the necessary majority of 75 House members to support the bill Tuesday, one representative asked that a bill be tabled until the legislature could straighten out its budget problems.

"That might be the year 2500," Representative Samuel Rappaport (D.-Philadelphia) asserted then that the money for the bill was already in the Commonwealth budget.

The House defeated the corporate and utility taxes.

Many legislators are aware of the complexity of the situation, if not its seriousness. Some even maintained a sense of humor. Representative K. Leroy Irvis replied, "That might be the year 2500," to which he's cradling here. The complexity of the situation, if not its seriousness. Some even maintained a sense of humor.

FOR ALPHONSO JOHNSON, BASS IS THE PLACE.

The place to take off on old forms, in new flights of musical fancy. The place from which to expand his tonal palette to include new instruments like the electric stick, which he's cradling here. But the stick is not the whole story. Between Alphonso and the four other musicians in his group, there's something like twenty different instruments with which to make the joy of electric music. And on their new album, Spellbound, they do just that.
