Proposal of Educational Changes
To Be Presented to Deans,

By STEVE DEWIS

A tentative academic plan to change radically the University of Pennsylvania will be presented to the Council of Academic Deans Thursday October 22nd.

The plan, created by Stellar, calls for the University to be split into two parts: a Liberal Arts College and a professional school.

While Stellar emphasized the tentativeness of the plan, he said that adapting it would benefit both undergraduate and graduate programs.

Transfer Association Co-Chairman Richard Slansky said Friday that the transfers seemed to have difficulty adjusting to their new college life. Transfer Association Co-Chairman Richard Slansky said Friday.

"I call myself a sociologist," the slim, vivacious professor said while seated in the chair of the Department of Sociology.

The selection of Fox for the chair is a credit to her diversified and broad education. Before this year, Fox was a psychology professor at the University of Pennsylvania.

The monies awarded will be used to help fund the new center. Schocker said. The grant is expected to be active.

The more controversial new regulations will concern fraternity activities. The draft of this report expressly bans hazing, soliciting, and the like. The regulations were adopted by the University's School of Medicine when the circumstances were not clearly understood.

66 Are Hurt In Collision Of Trolleys

Two trolley cars collided under 36th Street Station during the peak of the Tuesday morning rush hour, injuring at least 26 people. Five died from the accident. A witness said that the brakes of the trolley car were not working. Both cars were on collision course under the bridge. The accident occurred at the corner of 36th Street and Market Street. The two cars crashed head-on, injuring at least 26 people. Five died from the accident.

The outcome of the inquest will be a break in the atmosphere for the University.

The Signs of Life in America's Urban Areas

BY FRANK CAPPELLO

A unique experience of our environment is the thoroughness of urban America's signs. Signs of Life, the American City, a film making its world premiere tonight at the Institute of Contemporary Art (ICA).

The sixty-minute documentary was directed by Philadelphia's Christopher Brown, a 1983 graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. The documentary chronicles an ill-fated Brooklyn bank robbery. $1.

Wiggers Take Aim at Comic Strips

The traditions of comic strip history will once again be a part of the annual Mask and Wig show. This year's show, "POW! ZOWIE! ZAP!" debuts on Thursday night at the Wiggers' Center City clubhouse.

The traditional girls chorus Hoe finale will open new eyes to a part of the American comic strip that is often overlooked. The show opens tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts auditorium. Admission is $2 at the door.

The film, "Signs of Life: Symbols in the American City" (ICA), encompasses individual and corporate perspectives about our society.

Quadrille Opening Slated for Thursday

The Quadrille will kick off its spring entertainment schedule on Thursday with a performance of "Selling Benton's Group's Quiet Twist." The one-man play, starring Phil Anderson, provides a window into the non-social lifestyle of entertainers.

The Bazile Inquest

The announcement of a coroner's inquest into the death of University sophomore Robert Bazile comes after nine long months that had little light on the mysterious circumstances surrounding his death.

During that time, efforts by Philadelphia public and the University to discover the cause of Bazile’s death have failed. The district attorney has dropped all charges against the Omega Psi Phi fraternity members, and the University has been unable to produce any evidence. As late as last month, they had almost three-quarters of a year to press their investigation, the University’s administrators.

The last word on the case of the young man’s death. If the Omega Psi Phi brothers refuse to testify, Aronson, with the district attorney, has only two options: to issue a “no bills” or to file an information. If Bazile’s death is caused by hazing, the University is legally required to investigate it. If not, the University is required to ensure that any evidence that may be useful in determining the cause of death is preserved and made available to the coroner.

The University has been unable to produce any evidence to support their theory that Bazile died of natural causes. They have not released any autopsy or medical records, and they have refused to answer questions about the conditions at the fraternity house or the activities that occurred there.

The Bazile investigation has been marked by a lack of communication and cooperation from the University and the fraternity. The University has not been forthcoming about the details of Bazile’s death, and the fraternity has refused to provide any information about the events that took place at the house.

The University has also been criticized for their handling of the investigation. They have not provided any details about the methods they used to investigate the case, and they have not released any records or evidence that might help to determine the cause of Bazile’s death.

The Bazile investigation has been a source of frustration and anger for the Bazile family. They have been left with many unanswered questions about their son’s death, and they have been denied access to the evidence that might help to answer those questions.

The Bazile investigation has also been a source of concern for the students and faculty at the University. They have been left wondering about the safety of their own lives, and they have been questioning the University’s commitment to preventing hazing and ensuring the safety of its students.

The Bazile investigation has been a lesson in the importance of communication and cooperation in investigating deaths. It has shown that the lack of communication and cooperation can make it difficult to uncover the truth about a death.

The Bazile investigation has also been a lesson in the importance of holding institutions accountable for the safety of their students. It has shown that the University’s administrators have a responsibility to ensure the safety of their students, and they have failed to do so in this case.

The Bazile investigation has been a source of motivation for the Bazile family and for others who have lost loved ones to hazing. They have been inspired to continue their fight for justice and to ensure that the University takes steps to prevent hazing in the future.

will be immediately guilty of contempt of court. Members of George P. Po P, the non-residential fraternity where the incident occurred, have not cooperated with the inquest, Rendell said, in the hope of shielding the guilty from the consequences of the law.

Rendell explained, "We are not prejudging that there is any criminality at all" in the case, and said that he expected the maximum criminal charges which could come from the inquest. He reiterated, "We are just saying in this respect that we don't know" the circumstances surrounding the death.

Rendell revealed at the press conference certain aspects of the investigation which was performed on the night of Bazile's death.

The death occurred on the night of Bazile's death, and the handful of witnesses—pledges—who gave information to the police. Rendell said that pledges were required to answer questions posed by older members about fraternity history, and that they were punished for incorrect answers with a slap on the chest. Whether Bazlle was subjected to this treatment or other forms of corporal punishment, Rendell said, in what he hopes will be determined in the future.

Other changes in undergraduate education have been contemplated recently. In November, the Faculty Senate Committee on Education endorsed the concept of a core curriculum that would structure undergraduate education in a greater degree.

If you were considering the Princeton basketball team as a potential surprise this season, you might be wondering if the Tigers, despite their 3-1 start, are truly for real. After a dominating victory over Lehigh (61-52), the Princeton men's basketball team helped to return the game to its true home by defeating the Lehigh mountain climbers 74-55 on Tuesday in Princeton.

"There's no question that it was a big game for us," said Princeton head coach Mitch Muncie. "We were able to put together a solid performance and show our experience and leadership." For former Quaker player and current assistant coach Michael Gasorek, the win was particular motivating.

"It was a huge win for us," said Gasorek. "We showed our resilience and determination in the second half and were able to pull away with authority." The win marked this year's fourth straight conference victory, a trend that has been observed in recent years.

Despite the win, Muncie acknowledged the challenges ahead. "We still have a long way to go and much to improve upon. We must remain focused and determined in the pursuit of our goals to achieve success in the future." The Tigers are scheduled to face off against rival Lehigh again on Thursday, bringing back an anticipated two-game series.

Freshmen Survive Test of History

By CAROL KUNA

The Quakers' annual meeting with the Palestra was a meaningful experience, as they faced off against their cross-town rival LaSalle. The game was an exciting showcase of athletic spirit and competitiveness.

"We played with great intensity and determination," said freshman John Cooper. "Even though we didn't come out with the win, we gained valuable experience and learned valuable lessons for future games." The Quakers showed impressive resilience throughout, applying strong defensive pressure and capitalizing on their numerical advantage.

Cup Stays at Cupboard

The future of the Cup is in jeopardy as Penn's team faces off against Princeton. "We have a duty to protect our hard-earned trophy," said senior head coach Harry Booth. "This game is a test of our strength and character as we face our traditional rivals: Eastern, Georgetown, Providence, and St. Joe's."

The game is set to be a thrilling display of athleticism and strategy, with the future of the Cup hanging in the balance. "It's a game that we can't afford to lose," said Booth. "We're ready to give our all to defend our title and ensure the Cup remains in Philadelphia." The game is scheduled to take place at the Palestra on Thursday.
