Oil Company Million Dollar Grant To Endow Natural Science Chair

By DONALD L. LEMAY
The University received a grant of one million dollars this week from the Atlantic Richfield Company to establish the Arthur H. Schrieffer Chair of Chemistry.

The grant, given is honor of Robert B. Schrieffer of the University, is a 1962 graduate and a 1965 Ph. D. graduate of the Physics Department. Schrieffer, an expert in the field of superconductivity, is also a co-recipient of the Nobel Prize in Physics for 1972.

The Schrieffer Chair, according to Schrieffer, will enable the University to attract and retain a superconductor specialist for the University.

Schrieffer said: "It is a very exciting time for research in this field. and the University is well situated to carry out this research."

The grant will enable the University to endow the chair as a professorship, and the University has decided to hire a professor to fill the position.

The University has been working on this project for some time, and the grant was a crucial factor in making it possible.

The University's decision to fund this project is a testament to the importance of the field of superconductivity, and the University's commitment to excellence in research.

Federal Research Rule Changes Would Cost University $4 Million

By RICHARD E. GORDON
Proposed changes in federal guidelines governing grants would cost the University between four and five million dollars, University officials said Thursday.

The proposed changes, announced last week by the Office of Management and Budget, would affect a broad range of federal grants, and the University, like other institutions, is concerned about the potential impact of these changes.

The $4 million estimate is based on a rough calculation of the potential impact of the proposed changes. The actual cost could be higher or lower, depending on the specifics of each grant.

The University is working closely with the Office of Management and Budget to ensure that its proposals are understood and to minimize the potential impact of these changes.

The University is also working with other institutions to address concerns about the proposed changes, and it is seeking to develop a common position on these issues.

Federal Research Rule Changes

By ERIC MANNING
The University has received a grant of one million dollars from the National Science Foundation to support research in the field of superconductivity.

The grant, awarded to the University's Department of Physics, will enable the University to continue its research in this field, and it will also enable the University to attract new talent and to support new projects.

The University is currently working on a proposal to use the grant to fund a new research project, and it is hoping to receive a decision on the proposal in the near future.

The story is becoming well known that most liberal arts majors can recite it verbatim. It usually carries a huge headline which boasts something like the LIBERAL ARTS GRADS FIND FEW JOBS. The story begins by saying that in today's specialized world, employers are seeking for college graduates with a specialized education. There is also a reference to a right employment market which is creating widespread ignorance, failure or philosophy majors into such problematic areas as accounting, finance or management. The story concludes by saying that many colleges and universities are rethinking the traditional liberal arts curriculum, and that some of the consequences will be felt by students. However, many colleges are finding it difficult to attract liberal arts majors to their campuses, and that the traditional liberal arts curriculum is being reconsidered.

In the mid-1970s, many universities began to see the decline in enrollment of liberal arts majors. The trend continued into the 1980s, and by the early 1990s, the situation had become critical. The problem was not that there were too many liberal arts majors, but rather that there were too few. The traditional liberal arts curriculum was not attracting enough students, and the schools were being forced to reevaluate their programs.

Many colleges and universities began to offer more specialized courses in order to attract more students. This was not without consequences, however. The traditional liberal arts curriculum was one of the keys to the success of the liberal arts movement. By offering more specialized courses, the schools were sacrificing some of their traditional strengths.

Sides of the Senior Life

By Mark Cohen

However, no one ever told me about the part of senior life when things start to go south. When I was young, my parents were always busy working and leaving me alone to play. As long as I was safe and happy, they didn’t care if I was bored. But then things started to change. I was no longer the innocent little girl I once was. I had to start dealing with the real world. I had to learn how to make decisions and to live with the consequences of my actions.

I remember the day when I was told that I had to go to college. It was a shock. I didn’t want to go. I didn’t want to leave my family. But I had no choice. I had to keep up with the Joneses. The pressure was on.

I went to college, but I was not happy. I was homesick and I felt like I was being watched all the time. I was afraid of my own shadow. I didn’t know how to deal with the stress of it all. I felt like I was drowning.

I thought that I was the only one who felt this way. But then I met some friends who were going through the same thing. We talked about our problems and we started to feel better. We realized that we weren’t alone.

But then came the day when I had to leave college. It was the most difficult thing I had ever done. I was apache to get home and to see my family. But I knew that I had to keep going. I had to face the world.

I took a job and I worked hard. But I never felt like I was anything but a failure. I was always trying to prove myself. I was never good enough. I was never good at anything. I was always trying to please other people.

But then came the day when I realized that I was in control. I could make my own decisions. I could live my own life. I was no longer a slave to my parents. I was free.

I am now a free man. I can do what I want. I can be who I want to be. I am no longer a slave to the expectations of others. I am my own master.

I have learned a lot in my life. I have learned to be strong. I have learned to be independent. I have learned to be happy.

I am now a senior. I am almost finished with my college career. I am ready to move on to the next phase of my life. I am ready to make my mark on the world. I am ready to be who I want to be.

I am now a free man. I am no longer a slave to the expectations of others. I am my own master.

I have learned a lot in my life. I have learned to be strong. I have learned to be independent. I have learned to be happy.

A Photographic History of Jewish Life in Poland, 1864-1939

Lucjan Dobronoszcyk and Barbara Kininmonth-Gimblett

With over 300 Photographs

"Seven years in the making, the volume draws on the 10,000 pictures in the Polish collection at the NWO Institute for Jewish Research. Over 300 photos are introduced and explained in a lucid large-print text.... There are actors and schoolchildren, rabbits and seamstresses, peasants and scholars, craftsmen and business magnates. As a social and cultural record of a community moving creatively and politically into modern times—and then suddenly extinguished—this is a book to be seen, read and treasured by concerned readers."

—Isaac Bashevis Singer

"If you’re Jewish and looking for your roots and the world of your grandparents, this is the book for you. If you’re not Jewish, but just curious, this book is for you, too.... It is not just another coffee-table item, but a book to read and relish."

"A beautiful and moving book."—Irving Howe guidelines would reduce this total by approximately four million dollars in future years. In addition, Dougherty said, the new administrative procedures required under the new guidelines could cost up to $600,000 a year.

Colleges and universities have been campaigning for several years for a revision of the existing guidelines. Educational institutions charge that the existing rules are inequitable and that they do not reimburse all appropriate indirect costs.

"We could present arguments that even under the current rules, we're not recovering our costs," Budget Annenberg said.

or that "none of the detectives inquired as to the means used to obtain the items described (by the student)."

Chief of Detectives, Michael Carroll said Thursday that in several of the instances in which items were turned over to him, he did ask the student where they had come from, but trusted the student enough to believe him when he was told that they had been found.

"We thought by now it (the position) would be tied up. Being turned down by this person fouled us up."

In the meantime, the staff of the Center has been trying to raise the needed money. On May 5 the Center raised $30,000 at a fund-raising gala. Goff said that he was optimistic that all of the money would be raised. "We have a year to do it," Goff said. "It's going to be a lot of work but we can do it," he added.

To help cut costs, six permanent staff members are being laid off for one month this summer. Also, next year's professional theater schedule will consist of ten plays as opposed to the 12 produced this year.

The Truth About Buying Meat.

A Startling Comparison That May Change Your Meat Buying Habits—Forever!

What’s Your Beef, Inc. Solves a Myth.

We have always known that our portion control meats are a better value than the same meats from supermarkets. Portion control meats are our only business! 100 percent of our sales. Supermarkets sell thousands of other products, with meats representing only about 20 percent of their volume. But many of our potential customers have not shopped with us because they assume our quality image and contemporary atmosphere mean that we charge more. The simplest, most direct way of dispelling this belief is a quality-cost comparison with supermarkets.

Comparison between consistency in quality, trim, packaging, and availability continually proved the waste-free portion control meats at What’s Your Beef, Inc. to be more economical and better suited for cost conscious persons shopping for quality meat.

The Conclusion.

The true cost per pound for portion control meat from What’s Your Beef, Inc. was generally less than the true cost per pound for meats from local supermarkets.

It costs you no more to buy quality portion control meats and enjoy doing so while shopping at What's Your Beef, Inc. The Butchershop run by students for students.
