Annenberg Receives $250,000 Three-Year Grant May Save Theatre

By ROBERT DOW

The Annenberg Center has received a $250,000 grant that has put professional drama, which was eliminated in a budgetary crisis in February 1978, back on the University's academic scene.

Judith Kidd, director of the Center, said that the grant will enable the Center to produce four plays of the best in professional drama, which was eliminated in a budgetary crisis in February 1978, back on the University's academic scene.

At the end of three years, the grant will have given the Center financial stability and the ability to operate independently of outside support.

The grant, given by the Pew Trust, will provide seed money with which to take risks, which could make Annenberg a model for other universities.

The Center's stability may be dependent on outside funding, but a successful Center will force move to decide what activities to fund internally, according to Kidd.

The Center's director has already submitted a request for a three-year grant, which would be used to continue the existing program and to expand it.

The grant, which will be used for the first time, will also be used to expand the Center's program, which will be devoted to the study of American culture and society.

The grant will also be used to support the Center's work in the field of education and public relations, which was eliminated in the first year of the grant.

Johnstone
During the seven-year tenure at the university, former Vice President for Administration D. Bruce Johnstone symbolized the worst characteristics of the University's leadership: the isolation, the finance based decision making, and the intentional to personal image over all concerns. Johnstone's priorities were first and foremost President Meyerson's public image, then his own career, and only secondarily did he address the needs of the university and the students.

Johnstone was nota skilled administrator; he was a manipulator. To some extent, Johnstone personified the university: a selfish, calculating student and faculty leader who felt that he did not solicit to them. Johnstone was an expedient politician: he was appointed, and in fact, experts and student and faculty leaders thought he was dishonest. They knew that Johnstone was President Pro Tem of the University's staff of Halldemer who, like Johnstone, restricted access to his chief and went about his business as if he were the university's public image.

Two years ago, Johnstone publicly released a typed version of the Board of Trustees minutes and improved the University's public image. Sixty six lines indirectly critical of President Meyerson had been added to Change magazine's list of top American educators (sources available upon request). Johnstone took that news item out of Almanac in direct response to a story in the local newspaper.

Choose the Texas Instruments calculator that’s right for your major.

Statistical and linear regression capability provide the power to perform all the elementary and statistical operations you’ll need for course work.

The Texas Instruments TI-55B is a versatile calculator that’s been designed for just about every student. Preprogrammed statistical functions handle the calculations for you, so you can concentrate on what’s important. Preprogrammed statistical functions like probability, mean, standard deviation, and others make your job easier than ever.

The TI-55B can be purchased at most Ti sales outlets.

There are better ways to handle a tough sememath.

When you’re working in a specialized field, you need a specialized calculator. That’s why Texas Instruments designed the Scientific Business Analysis II. It’s not just a calculator, it’s a tool for business and finance, and the Texas TI-55 is for science and math. Each provides the power and the reliability you need in order to solve the problems you’re faced with.

Scientific Business Analysis II

Steel LCD calculator with real business capabilities. Selecting financial functions can mean the difference between solving a problem or just figuring it out.

The calculator is designed to be used as a tool in the following areas:

- Financial calculations
- Statistical functions
- Linear regression
- Preprogrammed functions

The Scientific Business Analysis II has a built-in memory, so you can store all the constants you need for your work. The calculator is powered by an order program that will calculate the exponents and perform other complicated operations.

The Scientific Business Analysis II also has a built-in printer that will print the results of your calculations. This is very useful when you need to keep a record of your work.

The Scientific Business Analysis II is available at most TI sales outlets.

How to use the Scientific Business Analysis II:

1. Turn the calculator on by pressing the ON button. The display will show 0.000.
2. Enter the first number by pressing the appropriate key. The display will show the number.
3. Enter the second number by pressing the appropriate key. The display will show the number.
4. Press the appropriate function key (SUM, M, etc.) to perform the calculation.
5. Press the appropriate number key to enter the result.
6. Repeat steps 3-5 as needed.

Using the Scientific Business Analysis II is simple and easy! Just follow these steps and you’ll be able to use the calculator to solve any problem you need.
UA Discusses Textbook Discounts

By DAVID FITZPATRICK

Discounts given on textbooks selling over $35 will be discontinued later this month, according to William Portnoy, Undergraduate Assembly (UA) chairman. Portnoy said at the UA's first meeting last night.

"I wouldn't take any assurances from the University that these discounts will continue by administrators," Portnoy said, referring to the possibility of a discount from various outlets on student-run company selling texts at the University.

"I had the opportunity to have in-depth conversations with administrators about the discount," Portnoy said. "I was told that I would not be able to get assurances from the University that these discounts will continue to be discounted," Portnoy said.

Portnoy, a member of the UA, said that the UA will continue to monitor textbook discounts and will report any changes to the student body.

University Joins Library Pool

BY BETTY ROTH

In order to increase the availability of library materials in the future, the University is pooling its resources with the major research universities and institutions throughout the country.

The University joined the pool called the Research Libraries Group (RLG), last February in an effort to continue its use of the library's resources to students and faculty. Although there will be no immediate, long-term savings from the project, De Gennaro claimed that the University's participation in the project will "be a strong signal to the academic community of scholarly material for students and faculty, and can have in-experience savings for any of the participating institutions"

The primary goals of RLG are the service levels to which library users are accustomed. "Libraries are experiencing substantial reductions in their standard of living as a result of inflation, increasing personnel and energy costs, and changing priorities of academic and society," he said.

The ten other universities and institutions that have joined RLG are the University of Michigan, the University of Pennsylvania, Princeton University, the University of North Carolina, the University of Washington, Stanford University, the New York Public Library, Dartmouth College, Rutgers University, and Brigham Young University. Eventually, the RLG expects to include 80 to 100 research institutions.

What's more, the University's participation in RLG is expected to attract more students and faculty members to the University.

To date, funding for the RLG has come from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, and the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

U.S. - Saudi Arabian relations are of utmost importance to William Quandt, a former associate director of the National Security Council (NSC), last February in an effort to be abreast of the Middle East situation, the national security advisor to the President and his advisors.

Quandt played a major role in the creation of "Junior Diplomats," a program that is designed to raise awareness of the United States - Saudi Arabian relationship among the younger generation.

"I was told that I would not be able to get assurances from the University that these discounts will continue to be discounted," Portnoy said.

The personal guarantees that the Office of Academic Affairs with an investigation of the admission of a new graduate student from the United States - Saudi Arabian relationship. Quandt's departure from the National Security Council is a result of the United States government's reduction of the U.S. military presence in Saudi Arabia.

According to Quandt, the Institute has made him a "good offer" in which he would have "more time for research." However, Quandt is choosing not to return to the University.

Although there will be no immediate, long-term savings from the project, De Gennaro claimed that the University's participation in the program will "be a strong signal to the academic community of scholarly material for students and faculty, and it will continue to be a signal of excellence in research."
"Warning: I Brake for Animals" - Move Over Pride!

By DAVID ELFIN

Soccer, all in a team sport. And yet, when opposing teams are separated by a six-pack of beer, a game of football takes on a different flavor.

"I was just taking a couple and I thought I was going to need a beer," said an Eagle fan as he purchased his six-pack. "And then the lights went out."

A smart gambler's first reaction would be to roll up a 238 yard rushing total. Alternatively, they might have considered unearthing their wishbone weapon. All of which depended, of course, on whether or not the Eagles did have a reasonable chance of winning. 'Bone' is here to stay. And for a change, we're concerned with developing the ground game. There's no flash in the pan," Gamble added. "But the total package is there."

The totals from there were immense. The Red and Blue led the nation in rushing and was no flash in the pan. "Goalies get the best look at the ground, when we're concerned with developing the ground game," Gamble said."

It was opening day, September 17, 1979, when the Quakers took on the Pennsylvanian in a battle of two great teams. The Quakers had no shutouts last year and the Eagles had five. Now it was up to Jim Tabak to fill those big shoes."

"It's strength of existence, strength of purpose. We're in better shape this year, we have a bunch of good players, but no great ones," Tabak continued. "We're in better shape than we were last year and we're determined to take the Ivy title this year."
