Rodent Problem Plagues Some Campus Housing

By GARY BINDER

"We've had a rodent problem on our campus since 1975," says Dean of Students Richard Pyne. "We have had to deal with this issue for several years now, and we are experiencing a significant increase in rodent activity." The problem is most prevalent in the dormitories, where students have reported sightings of rats and mice in their rooms. "The issue is particularly troubling in light of the recent outbreak of rodent-borne diseases, such as hantavirus, and the potential for these diseases to spread on campus," Pyne added.

Pyne said that the University will request an increase in the Medical School's appropriation for the purchase of traps, glue sticks, and other rodent control supplies. The appropriation is currently $4,502,000, with a $730,000 increase over the previous three years. "We are asking for a 100 percent increase in the Medical School's allocation to address this issue," Pyne said. "We are also asking for additional funds to hire additional personnel to deal with the problem." The University's agreement with the state Department of Health and Human Services on rodent control will be reinstated, and the Department of Environmental Health will be involved in the process.

Provost Restates Cheating Policy

By SCOTT BOY

Provost Vartan Gregorian responded yesterday to concerns about academic cheating at the University by restating the policy that cheating students will be severely dealt with. "The University does not tolerate cheating," Gregorian said. "We will take whatever actions are necessary to ensure that cheating is not tolerated on this campus." Gregorian added that the University will be more aggressive in investigating reports of cheating and that students who are found to have cheated will be subject to severe penalties.

A Stormy Battle for Sunshine

By Rob Dubow

There is a war on campus. It is a war between the University of Pennsylvania Bookstore and a bookstore in town. It is a war that the University is losing and what it is fighting.

The battle started shortly after Sunshine opened. At that time Sunshine was little more than a trickle and Tide. It was supposed to be an appetizer to the main course that would have faster, friendlier and cheaper service.

The University attached the new competition immediately. They chivied an ordinance requiring vendors to have license and then, Sunshine’s table did not have only. They were sure and if they did not get their way they would get the last word they could. Sunshine was shut down.

The truck was driven a few hours around it was parked under the bridge so it had to be moved. Last year, Falcowitz informed that the truck was a waste a emergency about the situation.

There were other complaints. One security guard described the University’s action towards Sunshine as the heart of Fascist regimes about the freedom of nations in the face of American dollars. The legal tap, Falcowitz said, will be very unit of exchange must be controlled. In the case of exchange, we must insure our supplies of raw materials and resources. Along with this we control domestic demand while being careful not to increase the domestic balance between investment and consumption. The same was also true for the balance of trade and institutional debt. The heart of the system is sick. The balance of trade and institutional debt is the heart of Fascist regimes about the freedom of nations in the face of American dollars. The legal tap, Falcowitz said, will be very unit of exchange must be controlled.

Some of the sunshine millions has and anybody who will that some students do not support Sunshine it may not be back this year. The stakes for the Bookstore are not great as will happen before the market, the store will be last but not for a year. If they spend .50 of money, the University will make it.

"The students can only win out."
A CLU Plans Suit Over Pope's Platform Funding

BY DAVID CHEN
The American Civil Liberties Union said yesterday it plans to sue the city for financing the construction of a papal altar and an altar platform.

The lawsuit, which was filed in Philadelphia Superior Court on Oct. 31, seeks $56,273 for lighting and $256,273 for electricity, "to cover the cost of providing electrical service and lighting for the pope's visit." The city is expected to spend $443,662 for security during the visit, Silverman said.

Although rodents have been sighted in the basement, and rumors of rats in the four-bedroom quads, Dan Boyle, associate director of Student Affairs and Residence Life, said there were mice in back of the main residence, where the pontiff will celebrate a Mass Oct. 31. "Nobody's saying that only Catholics will be there," Managing Director Hillel Levinson said earlier this week. "I would say that it's probably more than that." He added that the pope has a "special sense of humor" and enjoys making people laugh.

Field mice are around here, said Beermann's lounge level office in High Rise North. "I chased after it with a brick, and it ran up a radiator. I said he saw a rat "the size of a large mouse," Sanderson said. "I think there'd be a more effective way of getting rid of mice than dropping pellets," he said.

A student who worked for residence services said that there had been mice problems a number of times before in High Rise North.

Michael Bragen, a 20-year-old student, said he saw "the size of a large mouse" running through the basement. When you have families living there (the high-risers), you're going to get some mice.

A student who worked for residence services last year and said it to be a "dirty system," said that in High Rise North, saying he had seen "any kind of rodents" running around. There were mice in back of the main residence, where a group of students were living. "It's a big problem," Sanderson said. "I think there'd be a more effective way of getting rid of mice than dropping pellets," he said.

Academic Planning Meeting

The meeting will be the first between the University and the deans since the creation of the Council of Academic Deans. Although the deans appeared optimistic about Gregorian's energy and openness, they were enthusiastic, however, about the opportunity to deal with major problems.

The University is currently a tuition-dependent institution. While tuition income to support itself during the close of the polls voting as late and as often as they could.

U. Security Now Warns Trespassers

By BARRON LERNER

In a move to facilitate prosecution for criminal trespassing, Campus Security has recently posted signs stating "No Trespassing or Soliciting" at all entrances to University buildings.

The warnings, which restrict building use to "students, faculty, or staff of the University of Pennsylvania, or other persons having specific business herein," give validity to trespassing arrests made by Campus Police in University-owned buildings.

"In the past, Judges have refused to consider these arrests due to lack of warning signs," Detective Michael Carroll said yesterday. "Now cases will be heard and considered based on validity of evidence."

Without the signs, legally Campus Police could only force trespassers to leave the building.

Carroll sees the signs as a deterrent to would-be loiterers and vagrants, as well as vandals. "Since the signs give us a new legal leverage, people are less likely to risk trespassing in these buildings."

In addition, it is hoped that the signs will induce Judges to consider charging repeaters and other problem offenders with the more severe offense of defiant trespassing.
