Philadelphia theatregoers may be destined to re-examine their attitudes toward humanity, compassion, and the human condition. "The Elephant Man" appears next week, as the Philadelphia Company presents "The Exhibition" at the Harold Prince Theater of the Annenberg Center.

Exposing the life of John Merrick, a grotesquely deformed side show freak from the Victoria's, "The Exhibition" presents "the barriers of emotion so different, who wants so much to be accepted by society," said Victoria Hedley, artistic director of the company. "Merrick was physically hideous, yet inside he was extremely sensitive," she said.

When Merrick is abandoned by the showmen exhibiting him throughout Europe as "the ugliest man in the world," Sir Frederick Treves, a British physician, gives him a room in the attic of a London hospital and sees that he is adequately cared for. The relationship between the two men; Treves' original goal is to civilize Merrick, but both men learn from each other and develop their personalities throughout the play.

According to Schauffler, "Merrick became a part of society. It was surprising that he not only accepted, even Queen Alexandra, came to see him dressed." The play, written by Tom Gilman, was presented last year by the Philadelphia Company under the title "The Elephant Man." Gilman wrote the original draft for a one-act assignment in a playwriting course at University of Illinois in 1976, after reading an entry in Dr. Treves. In 1977, he produced a staged reading of the script, and after two years of revisions by Gilman, presented the four-act play as a main stage production.

"We had to extend the run," Schauffler said. "People kept coming back to see it two or three times."
Schauffler called the play "undeniably深刻," "It is a fresh every time I saw it."

Growing Up to Be A Fir Tree

Now it all sounds like a dream, but it is not. It is the story of my parents, "my little girl." I developed a bad of璇 from the time I was two and a half years old. It was two weeks before Christmas and my parents decided to celebrate with a Christmas tree. They brought a tree into the living room and set it up. The tree was about 10 feet tall and very beautiful. The next day, they decorated the tree with lights and ornaments. I was so excited to see the tree all lit up and decorated. I could not wait to touch the ornaments, but my parents warned me not to. They explained that the ornaments were fragile and could break if I touched them. I understood and was happy to admire the tree from a distance.

The tree was a fir tree, and my parents were very particular about its care. They watered it every day and kept it moist. They also covered it with plastic wrap to protect it from the cold. One day, my parents noticed that the tree was starting to turn brown. They were concerned and went to a garden center to buy a special fertilizer. They followed the instructions on the fertilizer and applied it to the tree. The tree started to recover, and soon it was as healthy as before.

My parents also had to prune the tree every year to keep it healthy and prevent it from becoming too tall. They would cut off the branches that were growing too long. They used a pruning tool that was specially designed for fir trees. This process was very important, as the tree was my parents' pride and joy. They were determined to keep it healthy and strong.

The fir tree became a symbol of our family and our love for nature. Every year, we would decorate it with ornaments and lights, and it would bring joy to our family. The tree was also a source of pride for my parents. They were proud to show it off to their friends and family. The tree was a source of happiness for all of us.

The fir tree was a beautiful tree that brought joy to our family. It was a symbol of our love for nature and our commitment to taking care of it. It was a tree that brought happiness to all of us, and it will always be a part of our family's history.

GLOBAL INTERDEPENDENCE, By MICHAEL COONEY

Lecture series at Annenberg Center groundbreaking in the theory of Einstein's grand unified theory to explain the behavior of light in the properties of matter: rather than be considered "the verification and amplification of the Poincaré principle," Einstein said. Not only must there be a single series of axioms for the description of nature; the laws of physics must also make a real prediction. Before Einstein explained Einstein's method of formulating a theory in which science can be unified with nature. The scientific method with an all-purpose language of nature and made a real prediction. From this, he derived a tentative series of axioms for the description of nature. If he had not dropped the idea of a logical deduction. He then tried new ideas as the deduction to determine whether the theory was coherent. If it did not, then the theory was "transformed or abandoned and the process started over. Einstein was also a philosophy. Holton said. "The idea of doing science should be a major theme of this series. We may talk of the evolution of a science. This can make for a continuous moral code.

"The idea that science is created was a novel thought in 1728 when Einstein wrote "On the Electrodynamics of Moving Bodies." The work later became known as the theory of relativity.

It was watching the Players playing hockey last night that, in his own words, the spark was lit. "We didn't want to give up," the Quakers' captain Anne Look said. "It was a hard fought battle."

Unfortunately for the Red and Blue, the Quakers broke a 1-1 tie in the final two minutes to win the game 2-1. The Quakers' captain Anne Look (10) in the sixth minute to beat out Mark Schaefer this morning. The ball was hit to Look in the final two minutes and she found herself facing the Red and Blue's goalie. She made a fine save, but the ball came loose and Look put it in the net.
