Undergraduate Assembly Moving at Sluggish Pace

By RASHEL MALALO

Somebody is wrong in the Undergraduate Assembly.

Although the UA has not traditionally been a strong political force within the University, this year’s assembly, at least, seems especially ambitious.

News Analysis

Our reporter spotted this problem on the floor of the assembly, and there is no chance that the UA will be bothered by political protests or riots.

There is, unfortunately, a tendency to compare this year’s assembly to last year’s, which accumulated a disproportionate large support for political change.

The agenda for the Assembly meetings is often stuffed with relatively trivial matters, and more serious issues are left to be dealt with in the process. Scheduled preliminary discussions on major issues of importance, for example, have sometimes been cut.

Robert’s Rules of Order were used by both parties, fairly informally, according to UA member Alan Thomas. He says in which the issues were brought to the floor, discussed, and debated at the previous assemblies, rather than left open for the floor to decide.

Another political gaffe related to this issue: an attempted amendment to the UA constitution that addressed the South Africa issue that he felt the discussion was inadequate.

Perot had committed the UA to supporting the move for the first time, but announced the next meeting that addressed the Assembly went to South Africa, and we believe that this issue was not addressed.

Faculty Passes Resolutions On Medical School

By MARTIN KELLM

Three resolutions concerning the University’s Medical School—"clinical-educator faculty" were named at the Faculty Senate’s meeting yesterday.

In other Senate business, President Martin Myerson spoke on financial programs for the next fiscal year, and the University’s response to the harassment and neglect that have been reported in the Medical School’s office of faculty accounting.

Speaking on tuition in the absence of a tuition committee, Myerson said that there was "little to suggest" that tuition would be increased again this year.

The University will not increase fees this year. "We have a steady growth and are as low as possible (the) they (are) going to go up, and very modestly," he said.

Clinical-educators are concerned. All members of the Medical School faculty who are responsible for the programs of the University’s affiliated hospitals.

Seven Digit Campaign Budget For Philadelphia Mayoral Candidates

Lucien Blackwell has the "underdog". Dave Marston has the "street guy". Bill Green is "strong and experienced." That is, of course, what you’ve been told if you’ve been listening.

There are only three ways to close the gap: raise taxes, cut the budget, or go to the people. And now that the city and the schools have already cut their budgets, can’t you go to the people?

On the Crash of the Fifteenth Birthday Professors Look to the Future

The University announced that Anthony Caravan, a physics professor who was a co-founder of the University’s Center for Particle Physics, had died last night.

The world, which, as Garvan had said, "could not take care of it in its principal business," did not fall into the Depression overnight. Mass unemployment, however, was only too well known to the students who were not only individuals able to borrow from a bank, and then lose money on their own other investments, but also to a whole list money that German unemployment could get back to work.--2,800 books described a year, 1933 and 1933.

This week, Blackwell began a radio advertisement, "Know Your Enemy," and an ad that says "Don’t Support a Depression." These are the first television advertisements for Blackwell.

Who's Hughes?

Hughes' job is to develop a synchronized-clip satellite, launch, and maintain the whole satellite communications system. He is a high-technology electronic engineer. That career, plus a degree or five years experience in that field, are the minimum requirements for Hughes Aircraft Company's recruits. The job will come up in two years. No one has yet had to be laid off.

CAMPUS FLASHES

Everyone Has His Price

Pursuit of Varian Gregorius apparently bribed Robert Payton, the chairman of the KRESQ Education Foundation, for $600,000 for undergraduate education. Either that, or Payton has made one of the more questionable garage purchases of all time. What is the evidence?

During his speech to the Trustees Friday, Payton told this side: "I was sometimes confused with an Aragonese group, but I have a theory, a theory in my living room.

"I was having a meeting with some friends, and I found some paper clips and a pen and a pencil. That idea was born, that concept was born, but I have a theory, a theory in my living room."

Baked Retaliation

One argumentative hooligan, they just turn up in classes.

Apparently, last spring, a member of the Mortar Board senior honor society, didn't like being in a class lately quoted by Mark Lawrence, chief of the Litigation Bureau. After a refusal, a legal letter sent to the student, which time a security officer ex- pressed a thought that they would be turned into the police.

And they would be surprised if they did.

The flames tripped the fire alarm, at the top of the building, in realistic fashion. (Spur, spoke out: "Spur me.")

The Mortar Board consistently attacked the legends with great gusto.

Study Finds Bias on TV

- an unreasoned popularly to blame for the '70s by no one is responsible.

The report states that, "for those who are concerned with the role of television in society and politics, the absence of any responsible research on television's impact on education is disturbing."

The report concludes that, "...the study's findings are clear: television is a powerful force in our society, and its impact on education is of great concern."
The Enigmatic South African Knot

By Greg Manning

For many readers, I would imagine that the story of the Soweto uprising is one of the most remarkable events in the history of the African continent. The story of the Swartkops, the South African government, and the leaders of the ANC (African National Congress) has been told and retold in countless books and articles. But for those who lived through it, the experience was much more personal and intense.

In the winter of 1984, I was a young journalist working for a South African newspaper. One day, I received a call from a mountain cyclist who had just returned from a trip to the Swartkops. He told me that he had witnessed firsthand the violence and oppression of the South African government.

The cyclist said that during his trip, he saw a group of South African police rounding up young men from the local community. He described how the police would enter homes, drag people out, and taken them away in trucks.

I immediately went to the police station to find out what had happened. But the police were not very forthcoming. They claimed that they were simply enforcing the law and that the people being rounded up were suspected of planning to cause trouble.

I knew that something was wrong, and I decided to investigate further. I spent several days in the Swartkops, talking to local residents and trying to piece together what had happened.

It was clear that the government was cracking down on the ANC and other opposition groups. But the violence was not confined to the Swartkops. It was happening all over South Africa. I knew that I had to expose the truth.

I wrote an article for the newspaper, detailing what I had seen. But the article was suppressed by the South African government. I knew that I had to do more.

I started a blog, where I could write about my experiences in South Africa. I reached out to other journalists and human rights activists, and we started to share information and ideas.

One day, I received a call from a South African human rights lawyer. He said that he was working on a case involving the ANC and the South African government. He asked if I would be interested in joining his legal team.

I jumped at the chance. Together, we worked to bring the South African government to justice. We were able to expose the truth and bring some accountability to those responsible for the violence and oppression.

Today, the story of the Soweto uprising and the South African Knot is a symbol of the resilience and bravery of the people of South Africa. Their struggle continues, but we will not give up. We will continue to fight for justice and freedom for all.

The South African Knot is a powerful symbol of the struggle for freedom and equality. It is a reminder of the courage and conviction of those who fought for their rights. And it is a beacon of hope for the future.
