The names of the five people who sit on the radio station's Board of Governors were released late Friday afternoon by the University's President's Committee on WXPN, which will be responsible for interviewing candidates for the position of President.

The board, which will be held in first meeting this afternoon at 1:00 this afternoon, is expected to consist of five members, including two from the University's faculty, a representative from the students, one from the alumni, and one from the community.

The board will consist of four recent graduates of the University's School of Law, and one representative from the community. The board will be chaired by Dr. David B. Wharton, an attorney with vast experience in the field of law and policy.

The board will be responsible for selecting the next President of the University, and will report its findings to the President. The University's Board of Trustees will then be responsible for appointing the next President.

="It is an hour and a half of charm and first rate professionalism...They have tuned their performance to the proverbial fine edge...." It is in pleasant evening of song as you will remember this season.

Both Schliamme and Epstein are distinguished actors as well as fine singers...the only mistake they make during the entire evening is ending it, but I must say they did it very cleverly.

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Today, Larry C. McNeil, Executive Director of the American University Program for Theory, Development and Practice, announced that the program had exceeded its enrollment goals.

According to McNeil, the program had received over 300 applications from students interested in pursuing graduate studies in the field of urban studies.

"We are very pleased with the response we have received," said McNeil. "We had set a goal of enrolling 200 students, and we have more than met that goal."

The program, which is designed to provide students with the skills and knowledge necessary to address urban issues, offers coursework in a variety of disciplines, including sociology, economics, and political science.

"We believe that our program is unique in its approach to urban studies," said McNeil. "We focus on the social, economic, and political dimensions of urban life, and we strive to provide our students with a solid understanding of the complex issues that arise in urban settings."

The program is housed on the University of Pennsylvania's campus in Philadelphia, and students have access to the university's extensive resources, including its libraries, laboratories, and classrooms.

"We are very proud of the program," said McNeil. "We believe that it is an important contribution to the field of urban studies, and we are committed to providing our students with a high-quality education."

The University of Pennsylvania is a world-renowned institution of higher education, and its programs attract students from around the globe.

"We are very pleased to be part of this exciting program," said McNeil. "We believe that our program will play a significant role in shaping the future of urban studies."

Wharton Center's Aim Is Energy Problem

MAY 16, 1973

By ROBERT L. SNIDER

Wharton Center's Aim Is Energy Problem

Until earlier this year, many Americans had in the back of their minds that the energy crisis had passed. They were wrong. This summer, when the nation was again caught for the second time in a serious energy crisis, Wharton professor Lawrence Mayer said in a recent interview. And a new Wharton center, directed by Mayer, is needed to solve the nation's energy problems. The center will be used to chart the nation's energy policies and to make recommendations to the federal government's Energy Modeling and Statistics Center.

The center's work is based on the nation's energy policy. Mayer noted that these forecasts are not yet in line with general displeasure about the future. It is only recently that discussion has turned to America's long-term energy needs, with alternative forms of energy such as coal, solar, nuclear, and hydroelectric power. Mayer said that good data is essential for a good analysis when focusing on the quality of data. Mayer said that good data is essential for a good analysis when focusing on the quality of data.
